CHARLOTTETOWN, P. E. ISLAND, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, 1866.

NO. 17.

A FINE CHANCE FOR SPECULATORS —AND— ENTERPRISING MEN!

THE undersigned are instructed by the Owners to offer for SALE, or to RENT, several valuable FREEHOLD well wooded, and possessing other advantages; and for which good and valid titles, and immediate possession can be given.

Also, four LOTS, being the residue of thirteen Building Lots, (the other nine having been sold the present season) in that most advantageous position known as "SUMMER HILL," adjoining MONTAGUE BRIDGE, ten miles from Georgetown, where close to 100,000 bushels of Produce are annually shipped, and nearly all paid for in Cash. A number of Stores, Wharfs, a Meeting House, Post Office, and other buildings, and the site of a new building, are also in the vicinity; with many Oats and Saw and Cloth Mills in the vicinity; where also any quantity of all kinds of timber can be had in trade at low rates. "SUMMER HILL" is the only Freehold Property for sale in the place which renders it most desirable for some of the above classes of persons.

A STORE and DWELLING on it, capable of holding 10,000 bushels produce, with a double Wharf and site for a Lane kiln, will be sold or leased on reasonable terms.

Plans, particulars or any other information can be obtained by calling at the office of Messrs. BALL & SON, Land Surveyors, Charlottetown. Reference can also be had from W. SANDERSON, F. P. NORTON, THOS. ANDERSON, Georgetown; JAS. BROADBENT, Campbell, Lot 4; F. W. HENRY, Esq., Esplanade Office, Charlottetown, and to the undersigned at Orwell, who is also Agent for the sale of Manny's Mowing Machine, the celebrated Yarmouth COOKING STOVE, and also for the Filling Mills of Messrs. BOURKE, Mill View, the Honble. JAS. McLEARN, New Park, FINLAY W. McDONALD, Pictou; where CLOTH is received and returned with dispatch.

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

Hackett groaned and wrung his hand. The educated villain had taken precautions of which he had never thought.

"And pray, Sir Charles, what does all this mean?" asked Hackett.

"That I have a great mind," said Sir Charles, raising his pistol to a level with Hackett's head, "to drag you to my cousin's room, reveal to him all your rascality, and hand you over to the mercy. We should have no difficulty in getting you to England, and I will undertake to find Kate."

"But what am I to do?" groaned Hackett.

"You see, my good fellow, that either you or Andrew must be got out of the way. If you like to hang, I will undertake to be reconciled to him; but if you wish to live the young girl knows nothing."

"Nothing," repeated Hackett mechanically, at the same time drawing off a goblet of rum.

"Then, if you wish to live, and keep the girl and the annuity, why, you know the alternative."

The baronet spoke coldly and distinctly, as if it were the most ordinary matter of business. This, however, was merely an assumed ease, to crush the resistance of Hackett. His heart beat all the while tumultuously, and it was with difficulty he kept the pistol in his hand from shaking.

"If it must be, it must be," said Hackett with a shiver.

"And how do you propose to do it?" asked the baronet coldly.

"I will," said Hackett, fixing his eyes "doggedly on the ground, 'the game's up in this part of the world—so I tell you what, Sir Charles—I'll just take what few things I want, and then I'll fire the place. There will be plenty of time for the others to escape, but he can't!"

"Well, Mr. Hackett," continued Sir Charles, "when you try your hand at arson, perhaps you'll give me fair notice."

"But I hope you will do it properly—I suppose it will be your first appearance as an incendiary?"

"No," said Hackett wildly, and in choking accents, "it will not—but that matters little to you, Sir Charles."

"Not a bit, my fellow," replied the other; "but now show me a room where I can rest my weary limbs, and wake me at dusk."

Hackett rose and showed him to Kate's room, and as he heard him lock himself in, shook his fist at the door. He was then about to return to his seat, when the two men announced the return of the expedition, at the head of which was Simon Girty.

The supposed Ralph Regis moved towards the door, and saw the motley group of Indians and renegades headed by Simon Girty. In their midst walked Amy and Jane Moss, scarcely able to support themselves. It was true, but endeavouring to show a resolute front to the villainous gang who had succeeded in capturing them.

"Welcome, ladies," said Hackett, alias Regis, affecting a friendly tone, "I am glad to see you in my house—it's not a first chop both, but it's a pretty good one."

They entered slowly, sweeping by the highwayman as if he were a pestilence, followed by Jane, who trembled and shuddered, less accustomed than her sister to the wilds. They were both dressed. They had been gugged in their room before addressing, by four men they found they concealed there, and hence away to the woods through theicket gate when all was still in the Moss.

"Where are we to go?" said Amy, impatiently fixing her eyes on the keeper.

"I'll show you a nice little room, anyhow," replied Regis, bowing.

He then led the way, Amy and Jane quietly following, until they reached one of the many rooms similar to that which they had just left. On their road they were joined by the negroes, who were introduced to the two young girls as their future attendants as long as they honored the Frog's Hole with their presence.

The room was the best of the whole number, and stood midway between those occupied by Andrew Carstone and Regis on the night of their arrival. The girls retained their composure until they were left alone.

"Oh, Amy, who has done this?" said Jane, sobbing in a way that seemed to threaten the breaking of a blood-vessel.

"I know not," cried Amy wildly; "I have strange suspicions, but I can say nothing. We must wait, my dear girl, and put our trust in Him who alone can save us."

And by an instinctive impulse the two young girls clasped each other, and their voices aloud in earnest and heartfelt prayer.

Meanwhile Ralph Regis—we call him by the name he went by in that house—had gone back to the common cause. We would say to every mother who has a child suffering from any of the foregoing complaints—do not let your prejudices, nor the prejudices of others, stand between you and the relief that will be sure to follow the use of this medicine, if timely used. Full directions for using will accompany each bottle. None genuine unless the fac-simile of CURTIS & PERKINS, New York, is on the outside wrapper.

Sold by druggists throughout the world.
Principal Office, No. 48 Doy Street, New York.
Oct. 11, 1865. Price, only 25 cents per Bottle.

A Night Cold, Cough, Hoarseness, or Sore Throat, which might be checked with a simple remedy, if neglected, often terminates seriously. Few are aware of the importance of stopping a Cough or Sore Throat in the first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if not attended to, soon attacks the lungs.
Dr. Cass's Branched Breaches were first introduced eleven years ago. It has been proved that they are the best article before the public for Coughs, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, the Hoarse Cough in Infants, and numerous affections of the Throat, giving immediate relief. Public Speakers and Singers, will find them effectual for clearing and strengthening the voice.
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine, at 25 cents per box.

"And squire, since we are pretty thick, I must tell you Kate's father's turned up, and wants to kill everybody as interloper with her."

"Indeed!" said the squire moodily, as he remembered where he had left Kate.

"And Colonel Butler did say that Robert Jay would give you a call about that, some time," continued Ralph, who enjoyed the terror of his fellow-criminal.

"There is no time to be lost," cried Barton in a tremulous tone, "the time for action has come. Ralph! at eight this evening I will be ready!"

"Very good, squire."

"See that my knives make themselves respectable by that time," said Barton, "so that Amy may not know them."

The innkeeper acquiesced, and then Barton went to his room, and throwing his weary frame on a couch, was soon in a sound sleep.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The shades of evening were falling, the band of desperadoes had unpainted their faces, and as far as possible had endeavored to look like the decent retainers of a wealthy house; Ralph was eating his supper, having got everything ready but his gold, when an Indian came slouching into the place. He was a man of middle height, with hideous paints all over his body, streaks of red, yellow, and black, especially those which usually characterize the half-drunken conjurer. He had an ample supply of bells upon his person, that jingled as he went.

The guard outside let him pass unmolested, but looked lazily in to see what reception he would meet with, and advanced near, "Come, brother—glass whiskey!" said the Indian in a deep guttural tone.

"Take it and be hanged to you," replied Regis savagely.

"Here dallas," said the Indian with a grin.

"Oh, if you have a dollar, it's all right!" exclaimed the mollified innkeeper, holding out his hand for the coin, which he pocketed without offering change; "you'd better take a bottle, I guess."

"No want bottle," continued the other in broken English, "me want drink, at, sleep."

"Well, we're pretty full of strangers, but you can sleep outside, I guess, follow you," said Barton, advancing from behind the bar; "you expect gentlemen to put up here, and you give shelter to drunken Indians."

"Drunken Indian as good as you," replied the Shawnee with offended dignity.

"Barton started, looked nervously at the Indian, and advanced near, "Come, brother—glass whiskey!" said the Indian in a deep guttural tone.

"Who are you and whence came you?" he asked curiously as he surveyed his paint and features.

"I'm Muskwaah," said the other, moving with all the gait of a drunken man.

"Muskwaah," said Barton quietly, for he knew Muskwaah well, "and since when have you taken the name of Muskwaah?"

"Since Muskwaah, my brother, was killed by the whites."

"Mr. Castaloga," exclaimed Barton gravely, "I have heard of you, but I never saw you. Hold the door there; at the peril of your lives let none pass. Mackett, on him!"

"Castaloga—for it was indeed our hero—stepped back, his teeth chattering in his head.

"It is useless—you have come into my quarters as a spy, and must make the consequences. Who would you track me?"

"I seek Amy Moss," replied Castaloga earnestly; "give her up and I will go."

"I'll follow you," said Barton, answering Barton coldly, leveling his pistol; "but I have business here I choose not to you to know. Surrender, or I fire."

"Fire!" said Castaloga, watching him with the eye of a hawk, and slowly raising his glittering axe.
