MR. CHARLTON AND THE EXODUS. Of course it is well to look matters squarely in the face sometimes, especially when by so doing an evil can be remedied; but it is not easy to see what good object is served by motions, such as that made by Mr. Charlton in the House of Commons, to enquire into the causes of the exodus of Canadians to the United States. If there was the ghost of a chance of such a motion being carried, and a commission being appointed to make a thorough and impartial investigation of the whole subject, Mr. Charlton's course would be highly commendable; but seeing that his motion was predestined to be defeated, it is not easy to see what good can be expected to follow from it. Granting that hundreds of people leave Canada for the United States every year, it seems scarcely necessary to parade the fact, since nothing can be done to stop the outflow. There is doubtless an increase of farm mortgages, but this has not kept pace with the increase of farm values; at least it has not in New Brunswick. The country is growing richer, not poorer. It would increase in wealth more rapidly under a broader trade policy : but in the meantime no good purpose is served in the condition of things is represented in the darkest possible light. Not a vote is gained by such party tactics. If the people could be aroused by such speeches to compel a change in the relations of Canada and the United States, so that commercial intercourse would be free and unrestricted, the moving of such motions would be intelligible; but as nothing comes of them, as the only use of the speeches made in their support is to the detriment of the country, we feel bound to enter a humble protest against them.
