"Well," answered Mr. Blykins, "it depends on what you want the man for. If you want him to do brain work, it's his head, and if you want him to run errands, it's his feet."

The Pope's Temporal Sovereignty.

(Sacred Heart Review)

In a recent editorial, the Boston Herald speaks with pitying kindness of the new Pope, shut up in the confines of the Vatican, away from beautiful Venice and the sea,—"my sea"—so dear to him. It calls him a "volitional prisoner," who will probably "continue the role of the Prisoner in the Vatican," and continued in earnest protest by Leo XIII., and it "wonders why the newcomer to the Papal throne does not break with the policy of his predecessors." Nay, it even goes so far as to remark that "there is not the slightest probability that temporal power will ever be resumed by the Papacy," and so "what is the use of keeping the question alive?" The fine nonchalance of the writer in regard to a question of acknowledged international interest is somewhat ludicrously exhibited in the following words that we quote direct: "One wonders how long the present custom will be kept up; whether it will ultimately be abandoned, or whether it will become traditional with the Church, like various other matters of procedure and discipline not necessarily inherent as ecclesiastical tenets, to maintain the policy of Papal seclusion, as a symbol of the supremacy in the world's temporal affairs to which the Ostrich aspires."

WHAT EXPERIENCE SHOWS

In Harper's Weekly for Aug. 8 is an illuminating editorial, which we commend to the notice of the Herald, and also to "the man in the street," with whom the phrase, "the Pope's temporal power," is a familiar if not a correctly understood expression. The editorial is entitled "The Future of the Catholic Church," and was written before the successor to Pope Leo had been chosen. The writer wisely remarks: "At this distance it is idle to speculate on the outcome of the Papal election. It may, of course, be expected that the decision of the Sacred College will be marked by the wisdom which has been exhibited on similar occasions during the last hundred years. Experience has shown, however, that should a mistake be made it will have no permanent effect upon the fortunes of the Catholic Church."

THE INDESTRUCTIBLE PAPACY.

The writer goes on to prove by history the marvelous power existing in the Church that buoy her up in all dangers, and everywhere preserves and restores her temporal power. The testimony is the more noticeable because contained in a periodical bearing the name of a publishing house once very inimical to Catholicism. The tribute runs as follows:—

"If we except the unique record of Pharaonic rule in Egypt, which itself was repeatedly interrupted by the intrusion of foreign dynasties, the Papacy has proved the most indestructible of human institutions. . . . To one familiar with the extraordinary history of the Papacy, as every cardinal must be, there is nothing appalling or even formidable in the existing ascendancy of the civil power in Italy. The Bishop of Rome has less to fear from Victor Emmanuel III. than he had from Theodor, from the Lombards, from the German emperors, or from Napoleon I. There is, in the nature of things, no reason to suppose that the head of the House of Savoy will succeed where greater men have failed. How can he hope to prove an exception to a rule that has held good for fifteen hundred years—the rule, namely, that every attempt to establish a secular power in Italy at the expense of the Papal system is doomed to evanescence and futility."

EXPERIENCE OF 1500 YEARS.

These are strong words, deserving study. We now direct our readers' attention to the reason given for the Papacy's continual success in regaining the temporal power. "If we seek a reason for the recurring success of the Papacy in recovering a modicum of temporal power, we shall find it in the indisputable fact that throughout a large part of Christendom public opinion sees in the Catholic Church a beneficent agency, and accepts the plea that for an effective exercise of his functions the Pope needs political independence. It may be said that seldom, if ever, have the spiritual functions of the Papacy been more efficiently discharged than they were by Leo XIII., although he, like his predecessor, called himself a prisoner in the Vatican."

The truth, of course, is that he never was a prisoner in any odious sense of the word; but his freedom from physical and moral restraint was due to no lack of power on the part of the Quirinal, but to the sagacious self-control exhibited by its three successive occupants, and to the successive vigilance and deference with which the currents of opinion in Catholic Europe were watched and heeded by Victor Emmanuel II, by Humbert I, and by the present ruler. What guarantee does the inmate of the Vatican possess that the successor of Victor Emmanuel III. will not be an infidel or a degenerate? What assurance has he that an outbreak of spite or violence on the part of the civil power in Italy might not be coincident with such a state of disturbance in Europe as would preclude the hope of success from any Catholic or friendly power? To say that the exercise of the Papal functions does not require political independence seems from the viewpoint of pious Catholics to be unreasonable, because it contradicts the experience of fifteen hundred years, to which no real exception is presented by the weakness and self-repression temporarily evinced by the House of Savoy, which itself is in a precarious condition."

THE RETURN OF THE TEMPORAL POWER.

We can hardly be expected to think that Pope Pius IX., Leo XIII., and Pius X. differed on this matter, when we read: "Even to Protestant and secular onlookers who contrast the increase of Papal prestige during the last quarter of a century with the simultaneous decline of the Italian monarchy in popular esteem, the recovery of a portion at least of the temporal power has ceased to seem chimerical. Meanwhile it is becoming more and more patent with every year that the retention of power by the Savoyard dynasty hinges on the maintenance of a respectful attitude toward the Catholic Church. Public opinion not only in Catholic Austria, but in Protestant Prussia and Protestant England, would not know permit Victor Emmanuel III. to do what his grandfather might have done with impunity. The slightest attempt at the present time to exert coercion upon the Vatican would provoke a widespread resentment that might be fatal to the stability of the Italian monarchy. It would then be said that the House of Savoy had been tried in the balanced and found wanting, that the co-existence of a king and a Pope in the same city had proved impracticable, and that the peace of Christendom demanded a restitution of temporal sovereignty to the Papacy. That is one of the events to which pious Catholics look forward, and it is likely to take place, unless the prudence and discretion thus far shown by the Quirinal shall be continued for many generations."

THE SHEET ANCHOR OF SOCIETY.

The article in Harper's Weekly contains the following prediction on the part of the writer: "In the meantime there is ground for thinking that the disposition of civilized mankind to desire the upholding of Catholicism as a force conducive to the commonweal is likely to wax rather than to wane. From both a religious and economic point of view the Catholic Church is coming to be regarded as a sheet anchor of society. Where else is there to be found a rampart against skepticism on the one hand, and against socialism on the other? We are not among those who expect that the twentieth century will witness a reabsorption by Catholicism of many, if any, of the Protestant sects that seceded from it some four hundred years ago. It is quite possible that individual members of the High Church wing of the Anglican communion may in increasing numbers go over to the Church of Rome. It is also possible that like sporadic conversions may take place in those Continental countries in which Episcopal hierarchies were established by the Lutherans. The Anglican and Lutheran bodies, however, will no doubt retain for a long period their separate organizations, and this may be predicted with an even closer approach to certainty of the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, the Baptists and other minor Protestant sects. But while no reabsorption on a considerable scale is probable, there will be evolved a tolerance, and even a sympathy, for Catholicism of which in Protestant countries there was no trace a hundred years ago."

This prediction our own minds would make far stronger and more hopeful. The twentieth century, dedicated by Pope Leo XIII. to Jesus Christ, and of which Cardinal Manning once said: "The twentieth century will be for the people," will,

as we believe, see a strict union consummated among myriads of souls redeemed.

THE PAPACY JUSTIFIED.

At a recent event, the hopefulness and wisdom of the writer's concluding words should commend them to all eyes and thinking men: "Of the growth of such tolerance and sympathy we see everywhere impressive evidences. They are as visible in England, and even in Scotland, as they are in Prussia, Denmark, and Holland, and they are nowhere more conspicuous than they are in the United States. As we have formerly pointed out, an attempt at this time to raise the 'No Popery' cry in England would simply provoke derision, and only a lunatic would try to revive today the anti-Catholic 'Know-Nothing' party that was for an hour so powerful half a century ago. The Catholic Church is now regarded by statesmen and political economists in Protestant countries as a useful if not indispensable coadjutor in the work of upholding the existing order. The inevitableness of such an alliance was so clearly recognized by Karl Marx that he made the repudiation of Catholicism a cardinal tenet of the Socialist creed. His junction has been heeded in both Germany and France; and, by a natural counter-movement, all the conservative forces of society are beginning to occupy a friendly position toward the Catholic Church. In view of this new alignment of forces, the Papacy is justified in looking forward with equanimity, if not with confidence, to the possible vicissitudes of the twentieth century."

THE TEMPORAL POWER BETTER UNDERSTOOD.

In conclusion, we would quote from a Harper's Weekly of a earlier issue, (Aug. 1st), this statement, "The Church of Rome has come to be regarded by conservative statesmen and political economists as a barrier against socialism, and by Christians of all sects as a bulwark against skepticism. Among those not born within its pale there are many men who acknowledge that if it did not already exist, it would be necessary to invent it."

This shows emphatically, as did the stirring events of the past month, that the essential factors in the doctrine, customs and history of the Church are to enter ever more and more essentially into men's discussion and study. The temporal sovereignty of the Pope has been a matter seriously misunderstood and misrepresented in far too many cases hitherto. It should be the duty now of every lover of the truth to try to understand what the Church herself means in this important matter, and the real bearing that it has on the welfare of the world.

Cardinal Vaughan, Archbishop of Westminster, who died on June 19, left total property of the value of £743,531, including net personalty £168,858. His will, consisting of three lines, reads as follows: "In the name of God this is my last will and testament, and I give to my executors all I might do possessed of."

Pains in the Back

Are symptoms of a weak, torpid or stagnant condition of the kidneys or liver, and are a warning it is extremely hazardous to neglect, so important is a healthy action of these organs.

They are commonly attended by loss of energy, lack of courage, and sometimes by gloomy foreboding and despondency.

"I was taken ill with kidney trouble, and became so weak I could scarcely get around. I took medicine without benefit, and finally decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. After the first bottle I felt so much better that I continued its use, and six bottles made me a new woman. When my little girl was a baby, she could not keep anything on her stomach, and we gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla, which cured her." Mrs. THOMAS ISAIA, Wallingburg, Ont.
