Lady Wyverne's Daughter.

CHAPTER II.

The title he must have—Lynnewelde, too, for it was entailed; but a title and a large house are not sufficient for a man to live upon; and many wondered whether Philip would inherit his uncle's money as well as his name.

Perhaps some such thoughts crossed the young heir's mind, even now, as he drew near Lynnewelde. Philip knew well what the want of money was. When his father died, he heard his mother say, in the midst of her grief, that anxiety had shortened his life; he had known no other care than want of money, want of means sufficient for keeping up the position he thought himself entitled to. His life had been a struggle, and when his son gazed upon his dead face and heard his mother's words, it was no wonder that a strong conviction of the need and value of money crept into his heart. He tried to think of that now, but to remember the errand he was upon, the dying man who wished to see him, and the two fair young daughters who would be left orphans if the worst happened, and his uncle died. He remembered the last time he was at Lynnewelde—Lord Lynne was well and healthy then, and his cousin, Agatha had talked there daily, and Philip felt some curiosity as to what she would be like. If she were only one half as beautiful as her mother, he knew she would create a sensation, even in a country where beautiful faces are not rare. He had never seen her, this strange cousin, this Ines Lynne, who had telegraphed for him.

Then his thoughts flew back to Florence Wyverne, whom twice that morning he had been on the point of asking to be his wife.

Bathurst was reached at last, and there Philip found the carriage waiting to take him to Lynnewelde.

BEFORE MY BABY CAME

I Was Greatly Benefited by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sydenham, Ont.—"I took your medicine before my baby was born, and it was a great help to me as I was very poorly until I had started to take it, just felt as though I was tired out all the time and would have weak, faint spells. My nerves would bother me until I could get little rest, night or day. I was told by a friend to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I only took a few bottles and it helped me wonderfully. I would recommend it to any woman. I am doing what I can to recommend this good medicine. I will send that little book you sent me to any one I can help. You can with the greatest of pleasure use my name in regard to the Vegetable Compound if it will help others take it."—Mrs. HARVEY MILLIGAN, Sydenham, Ont.

It is remarkable how many cases have been reported similar to this one. Many women are poorly at such times and get into a weakened, run-down condition, when it is essential to the mother as well as the child, that her strength be kept up.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for the mother at this time. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and does not contain any harmful drugs. It may be taken in safety by the nursing mother.

"How is Lord Lynne?" he asked of the footman, who helped to find his luggage, and seemed anxious to hurry him away as soon as possible.

"He was no better when I left, sir," said the man. "Miss Lynne begged you would make all possible speed, for my lord has been asking for you all day."

"Why did they not send for me sooner?" he inquired.

"My lord was as well as you, sir, on Tuesday morning," replied the servant. "He was taken ill on Tuesday night with a kind of fit, and he has never spoken since, except to ask for you; and then Miss Lynne telegraphed at once. It is Thursday today; he has not been ill three days."

"And he is in danger?" asked Philip. "When I left home, sir," said the man, "Miss Lynne told me to return as quickly as I could, for it was life or death."

It was not a very long drive from Bathurst to Lynnewelde. The coachman did not spare his horses, and in less time than he thought it possible, Philip saw the dark masses of wood that surrounded the house.

Lynnewelde had undergone so many alterations and improvements that no trace of the old house exists. It is now a stately, magnificent mansion, with turrets and gable ends, and oriel windows, with park and pleasure garden, lawn and lake. The stately trees that surround it are noted for their age and beauty; that grand old cedar in the midst of the lawn is said to be the finest in England, and Lord Lynne was prouder of it than of all Lynnewelde.

The carriage drove slowly up the long avenue of chestnut-trees. The hall-door swung wide open when Philip alighted, and the old butler, together with some of the other servants, stood ready to receive him.

"How is he?" cried Philip, eagerly.

"He is dead, my lord," was the grave reply. "He died half an hour ago."

While he lived, Philip could never describe the sensation, the impression those few words made upon him. He had known for many years that at some future time he should be Lord Lynne, but it had always seemed to him a remote contingency; he had not built upon it. He had never attempted to realize the time when Lynnewelde would be his, and he should be Lord Lynne. It came to him now with a sudden shock that seemed to divide at once from his past life, and open a wonderful future to him. Like one in a dream, he followed the man, who showed him to his room.

"I wish to be alone for a short time," he said, "and then I will see Miss Lynne."

He felt it needful that he should be alone. He wanted to realize his position—to feel at home in it, before the scrutinizing eyes of the world were upon him.

Only three hours ago and he was beginning to lose himself in a pleasant love-dream. It was only three hours since he stood with Florence Wyverne, trying to read the secret of her blushing face and shy, sweet eyes. Yet it seemed to him that he had lived a life since then. He was in a new world.

They were not all light or selfish thoughts that passed through his mind. He resolved not to live in vain, but to use the position, the influence, and the rank that would be his, to good purpose. When that hour was over he rang the bell, and asked the servant who answered it to show him to the room where Lord Lynne lay. Then he knelt by the side of that silent figure for whom all the glories of the world were over. He was not ashamed to pray that, when he too came to die, he might not have lived in vain.

In the simplicity of his brave and noble heart, Philip, now Lord Lynne, made high resolves, and in the darkest hours of his life he did not forget them. Then he went to the drawing-room and asked to see Miss Lynne and Miss Agatha; but they begged him to excuse them. Miss Lynne was not well, and Miss Agatha was with her. They hoped that for the next few days he would excuse them from leaving their own apartments.

"Of course," he thought—"quite right. I was foolish to think they could see me, and talk as if nothing had happened."

Although he did not see his cousins, Philip did not allow them to forget his presence; and Miss Lynne's little

Do you suffer from urinary troubles

Gin Pills can bring you quick relief. They soothe that burning sensation in the bladder; the frequent desire to urinate is overcome; brick dust deposits vanish; congested kidneys and inflamed bladder which caused the irritation are restored to normal condition, and you again enjoy comfort by day and uninterrupted sleep by night. Once you try Gin Pills and you will not give them up until every trace of urinary trouble has left you.

page declared he was tired of carrying Lord Lynne's messages—now it was a bouquet of the most magnificent flowers; then some very rare fruit, or a book he thought would interest them; thus not an hour in the day passed without some communication between the cousins.

They were busy days, too, for Mr. Gregson, the family solicitor, was in the house, and all the arrangements for the funeral devolved upon him and Philip, so that he had but little time to think of his new position, or to realize it during the four days that elapsed between the old lord's death and his burial, which was arranged to take place on the Monday; and the will was to be read immediately afterward.

It was a dull, rainy day, and dreary enough looked the long black procession, winding among the trees in the park. It was over at last; Stephen Lord Lynne was laid by his father; the vault was closed; the mourners returned home; the blinds that had been kept close were thrown open, and the light once more found its way into the sumptuous apartments of Lynnewelde.

"The will was to be read in the library," Lord Lynne, Sir Harry Leigh (the late lord's dearest friend), Mr. Gregson, with his clerk and another solicitor, were present. The two young ladies had both declined to appear; they requested Mr. Gregson to wait upon them afterward; and he, who knew the terms of the will, thought it quite as well they did so.

A bright fire burned in the grate; the library, a large and very handsome room, looked doubly cozy and inviting when, through the large windows, was seen the dull leaden sky, the dripping trees, and the incessant falling rain.

"I shall not detain you long, gentlemen," said Mr. Gregson, as his listeners grouped themselves round him. "I know the will is not a very complicated one, for I drew it up myself."

Not very complicated, certainly, very strange. Philip, Lord Lynne had wondered at times about his uncle's money; he had wondered whether he should have any share of it, but he never for a moment dreamed of anything so strange as the bequest he now heard. After some few legacies and annuities to old servants, Mr. Gregson read:
