Will It End in Trade War?

Undismayed by the failure of the Peace Conference, the Czar has invited the nations to another council, the ob-Ject being to consider the trust movement and ways and means of protecting industry and commerce from this modern piracy. The American press sees a menace to the United States in the Czar's proposal. Among the nations of Continental Europe there is undoubtedly a strong feeling of alarm over the American "invasion," and a erystallizing of this sentiment, which may take the form of an economic alliance against the United States. A prominent official of the treasury department at Washington says the United States would do well to anticipate events by accepting the commercial treaties with European nations now pending in the Senate. It is not thought that any conflict will be waged on American breadstuffs, as that would only increase the price of the necessaries of life, but the prevailing view at Washington is that the Czar's proposal means nothing less than an ating tariff on American manufactures. The method of procedure would be an agreement among the powers to impose a tax on all trust-made goods; which would, of course, strike princi-

the trusts. Mr. Balfour, in reply to a question in the House of Commons yesterday, said that the British Government was still considering its reply to the Czar's to terminate. This is highly creditable suggestion, but it was impossible as to these gentlemen, and sympathy will yet to announce Britain's attitude. The hesitancy of Great Britain is easily understood. It is the cardinal principle of her foreign policy to maintain Dr. Langtry, the well-known Anglican friendly relations with the United divine, who is administrator of the States, and she would be no party to a trade war against that country, unit served to modify the attitude of our big neighbor in his international commercial classes of other countries are incensed when they find Americans States by the highest tariff wall in the economic truth that a nation cannot forever sell without buying.

Newfoundland and Canada.

The public affairs of Newfoundland should have an increasing interest for Canadians, now that the question of union has come to the front again and promises to become one of practical politics in the very near future. The population of the colony is 220,000. The public debt amounts to $19,640,000, or $89 per head, as compared with a per capita debt of $59 in Canada. Two-thirds of this debt, however, is represented by the railway across the island, which belongs to the government and which the Canadian Gov- jorities get the benefit of it. ernment would have had to build if the island had entered confederation in 1869. The Newfoundland correspondent of the London Times makes a strong hall, and will convert it into the appeal for union and advances some cogent arguments. He points out that the United States has secured from Newfoundland fishing rights along one-third the coast line of Newfoundland, under the treaty of 1818, and the tripartite status of Newfoundland. Canada and the United States with regard to the Atlantic fisheries, defers Canada is a constant sufferer. The from $30,800,000 to $50,700,000. Island holds the key to the situation by its possession of unlimited supplies of bait fishes to which the Canadians and Americans have to seek access. The Americans who want this bait to prosecute their deep sea fisheries off Grand Banks, can disregard Canada's endeavors to make the question the basis of a reciprocity treaty, because they can obtain from Newfoundland the concessions they need without consulting Canada. "If Canada," says the Times correspondent, "obtained nothing else as a result of absorbing Newfoundland but the right to an undivided administration of the inshore fisheries of the North Atlantic centered at Ottawa and with Newfoundland's present independent authority abrogated, the advantages-direct and indirect-would more than compensate her for any sacrifices she might have in Europe and Asia. to make in order to consummate the union and 'round off' the Dominion."

The question has also a strategic on the north and Cabot Strait on the south of the island. The great bulk of Canada's water-borne commerce is carried on via the St. Lawrence, and operating from it as a base, not only in the community.

would Canada be at its mercy, but it would not be safe for a cargo-carrier to cross the Atlantic Cape Rice is the great landfall for all ocean shipping, and the main searoad is across the Grand Banks. St. John's dominates the whole Atlantic area away to midocean, and it is difficult to conceive of any more disastrous contingency for the Empire than that of an enemy's acquiring control of this, the oldest Another advantage of union, says the Times correspondent, would be the improvement of the St. Lawrence route. The sea trade of the Dominion moves past the Newfoundland coast, and many a disaster occurs there. The obvious remedy is to increase the number and efficiency of the coastwise-safeguards-lighthouses, fog alarms, etc. Newfoundland clearly cannot be expected to do this-first because she cannot afford it, and, secondly, because she is not obliged to protect Canada's shipping. At the present time she spends sixty thousand dollars on her lighthouse service, which is fully adequate to the needs of her own mariners; and therefore, her mere duty is done. But she also takes a trust conference is regarded as a larger view of the matter, and assists as far as in her lies in improving the greater lights, though this involves serious obligations. Canada, if she is to retain her St. Lawrence trade, must speedily safeguard the front door of the Dominion, and no means will enable her to do this so effectively as would confederation.

Banking and Marriage.

One of the great Canadian banks recently raised the salary limit upon which clerks are permitted to marry from a thousand to fifteen hundred tempt by Europe to put a discriminat- dollars a year. A Toronto paper says that five clerks in one branch there resigned their positions in consequence. The inference is that they had contracted tender engagements which, pally at the United States, the land of under the new rule, they could not fulfill they remained in the ploy, and which they had no desire go out to them and to the other parties to the nuptial contracts. No one below an accountant ever gets $1,500 a year. And there is only one accountant to at least five other employes. And what does encroaching on their own markets that mean? But why don't the managers and assistants see to it that the capable, skilled, faithful men who are serving them get sufficient salaries to enable them to live without trampling under foot the laws of nature and of life? And, again, who are most likely to steal the bank funds, married men, who are struggling on to keep themselves and their families on a scanty income, or men who fall into the dissolute ways to which life-long, constrained celibacy is almost sure to Sidney Lanier. Sidney Lanier was born at Macon, Ga., 1842. On account of fil-health he went to Baltimore, where for a while he played the flute in the famous Peabody concerts—he was passionately fond of music, and brought marvelous harmonies out of his flute. In 1879 he became lecturer in English literature at the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. He died at Lynn, N. C., in 1881. He wrote a novel, "Tiger Lilies," "Centennial Ode," "Science of English Verse," "The English Novel and Its Development," and a volume of poems.

Two Roads to Wealth. [Toronto Telegram.] The man in the city believes that there is a fortune waiting for him if he could only get to the country and keep hens. The man in the country believes

The Sting in the South. [Baltimore Sun.]

If the north after conquering the south had treated it as the British now promise to treat the conquered South African Republic the bitterness of heart which lingered for years after the war would have healed almost as soon as the actual wounds. But instead of permitting the southern people, after they had laid down their arms, to return to heir homes and build up their shattered fortunes, they were subjected to a persecution of ingenious malignity, lasting through ten years, incomparably more bitter to a high-spirited and selfrespecting people than conquest on the field of battle. It is the memory of the cruel reconstruction period which yet lingers in the minds of the older peopl of the south that causes many of them to dissent from Gen. Alexander when he said that it is better for the south that it did not succeed.
