

Could Not Rest at Night. Back Was So Weak.

Weak, lame and aching backs are the primary cause of kidney trouble. When the back aches or becomes weak it is a warning from the kidneys that everything is not right with them.

Heed the warning: cure the weak, lame, aching back and dispose of any chances of further trouble.

If you don't do this, serious complications are very apt to arise and the first thing you know you will be troubled with Dropsy, Diabetes or Bright's Disease, the three most deadly forms of Kidney Trouble.

On the first sign of anything wrong Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go to the seat of the trouble and strengthen the kidneys, thereby strengthening the back.

Mrs. John Puigh, Parkdale, Man., writes: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and find nothing to beat them. I could not rest at night my back was so weak. I tried everything, but could not get anything to do me any good until I was told by a friend to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I tried them and I am not the same weak woman I was before. I am very thankful to have found so speedy a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. M. L. Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

HOLLAND TO BECOME PART OF GERMANY

Dutchman Says Federation With Kaiser's Kingdom Is Inevitable.

QUEEN WILHELMINA

Lives So Much Apart That Her Personality Would Hardly Affect Question.

London, Nov. 21.—The Daily Express publishes an article which the editor assures his readers is from the pen of a "British gentleman of world-wide reputation," and which deals with the question of the annexation of Holland by Germany. The writer gives the views of a Dutchman of reputed wealth, prominent in business circles and an owner of property. He is also, the writer asserts, associated with several learned societies, and, like many of his compatriots, has travelled a great deal and reads and speaks several English, German and French. He has always appeared to me somewhat biased in his partiality for England and the English. He takes no active part in politics, so his opinions are those of a looker-on, not influenced by party bias.

"When staying with this gentleman in Amsterdam recently," says the writer in the Daily Express article, "I put to him the question whether or not he placed any credence on the statement sometimes made in England that the German's ambitions is to annex his country. In reply to my inquiry he said: 'Had you asked me that question a few years ago I should have said that it may be one of Germany's ambitions, but the possibility of its fulfillment are so remote that it is not worth considering.' Today I can give no such answer. Of course, no one advocates such a change in the writer or the Dutchman's point of view, but it is a problem now frequently talked over by the rich and poor alike, who weigh up the pros and cons and form opinions as to how it would suit their individual interests."

"I have heard that there are German emissaries in this country endeavoring to promote a desire on our part for annexation. I have never recognized one, however, and I should think that Germany's point of view that would be unnecessary. The development of events during the next few years will show its necessity or otherwise. Certainly Holland will never become part of Germany by force of arms. If it happen at all, it will only be because a large proportion of my countrymen think it necessary owing to England's changed attitude."

Change Time Has Brought.
"If anyone had hinted at such a change five or six years ago, he would have been laughed at. Now, however, 'Oh, England will never allow it!' That was a complete answer and unanswerable, and so we never worried, but sleep quietly. Now we ask: 'Could England prevent it? Would she even risk a fall by attempting to interfere with Germany?' We read in the newspapers that Germany's naval programme is weakening, and that in a few years you will regain your proportionate strength. I, who are next to the papers, recognize the bluff. It astonishes us that any sane man can believe that Germany, having got so far, is now going to throw away her chances of surprising you. Essen and Emden are close to our borders, so perhaps we know better than you do what is going on in Krupp's works. All this makes us think your former naval supremacy is rapidly disappearing."

"There are other matters. Formerly we regarded England as the leading manufacturer of the world; today, from the experience of our own eyes, no one in this country can help believing that Germany has taken your place. Bridges, engines, electrical and other machinery, all that come here are from Germany, and the requirements we buy for our own colonies are from the same source. In engineering, why not also in ships of war, which, after all, are only a form of engineering? You have a party in England which wants to decrease your navy. Germany has a similar party. The difference is, the friends of the little navy get their way in England; in Germany they only talk."

Make Terms With Germany.
"As England is falling us, we must make what terms we can with Germany. Perhaps the question of naval power is more realized here than in England, no one forgets that once, about the middle of the seventeenth century, we were as great a power as England, and more prosperous than any other country. With the decline of our navy, our power and our prosperity declined. Recently the Emperor William advised us to strengthen our coast defences. A vote for a large sum for that purpose is now being discussed in our parliament. His advice was amusing. If Germany acquires Holland she will at once have to make coast defences, and the more forts she finds the better for her. On the other hand, such forts could never be used seriously against Germany. Her armies could march over our borders and take them without the least trouble, and besides, this is the amusing part, our supplies of ammunition would have to be obtained from Krupp. The Emperor would have another advantage. Our increase of armament would mean a large order for his works, namely, Krupp's, and the profit would be used toward building naval armament for his own country. Practically all armaments in our country are purchased from his firm."

"But surely the loyalty of the Dutch to the house of Orange," I said, "is something, and surely your countrymen would fight for independence as they did in the past?"
"That is a subject which is not understood in England," was the reply. "You have all read Motley, and realize the great deeds of William the Silent and his successors in the seventeenth century, but you forget that at home with William III. The present house are not even their descendants."

Royal Influence.
"A young man inspires national sentiment, and so it was with us a few years ago. Ask anyone now, and you will find that such sentiment has nearly disappeared. The queen is doubtless excellent, but she leads a life so apart from her subjects and enters so little into their lives that her personality would hardly affect the question. Annexation is a nasty word, and, if used, no doubt would breed patriots, but it would be called another name. A great deal would be talked about preserving our integrity, and also about obtaining the protection of the great German Empire. It would be suggested that our trade would derive enormous advantages, etc. All this would sound better, but the result would be the same. Besides, you must remember that such a change would not be made in cold blood; it would be made at a moment when temporary friction with England or great trade depression or other causes made it favorable. Your Boer war would have provided an excellent opportunity, but England had not then allowed the German navy in the North Sea to equal hers."

"How could it be suggested that the trade of your country would benefit?" I asked.
"Anyone going from Holland into Germany," he replied, "cannot but remark on the wonderful prosperity that is to be seen directly the frontier is crossed—say, at Goch or Venlo. On our side it is a dreary waste, on theirs, busy manufacturing towns, rapidly increasing. It would be asserted that prosperity would spread into our country. Again, as you know, many Dutchmen hope to see the Zuider Zee drained; this is a question of capital. It would be hinted that Germany could at once provide it. Further arguments would be that Amsterdam would become the great centre of art, that her stock exchange would soon be more important than now, and that her old position as the chief banking city of the world would be regained."

Cannot Stand Alone.
"Again, a large proportion of our wealth is invested in our colonies. What redress can a small country have if the great powers fail to protect our colonial interests? A Germany would undertake to preserve our right, and so cause our trade to rapidly increase. Mind, I do not say active part in politics, so his opinions are those of a looker-on, not influenced by party bias."

FOX HUNTING NOT IN ANY BAD CASE

Pessimists' Alarm Is Groundless in Light of Facts and Figures as Gathered.

London, Nov. 22.—With the opening of the season at hand alarmists again are trying to frighten the public by saying that fox hunting has had its day. They argue that the sport cannot long outlive the slow but certain changes that are taking place in the conditions of land tenure. The fox is said to be steadily deteriorating in the sport, they contend; an increasing artificiality in the method of furnishing material for hunting—referring, of course, to the system of hand rearing and turning down imported foxes; a serious growth of claims upon the financial resources of almost every hunt, and a threatening lack of sympathy with huntsmen on the part of the smaller farmers.

Though hunting is far from being what it was 50 or 60 years ago, it is certainly in no bad case. By the time that fox hunting has had its day, they argue that the sport cannot long outlive the slow but certain changes that are taking place in the conditions of land tenure. The fox is said to be steadily deteriorating in the sport, they contend; an increasing artificiality in the method of furnishing material for hunting—referring, of course, to the system of hand rearing and turning down imported foxes; a serious growth of claims upon the financial resources of almost every hunt, and a threatening lack of sympathy with huntsmen on the part of the smaller farmers.

Latest reports show that there are 456 packs of foxhounds in the United Kingdom. England and Wales claim 364, of which 173 are foxhounds, 88 harriers, 16 staghounds, 11 draghounds, 53 beagles and 18 pointers. Scotland has 11 foxhounds and one harrier, two otter and three beagle packs. Ireland lays claims to 25 foxhound packs, 40 harriers, 4 stag and 6 beagle packs. In total, the packs which hunt the fox and stag or deer number some 9,000 couples of hounds, while of harriers and beagles there are some 3,000 couples.

Dropsy—

Given up by Doctor

"I had dropsy, and was told by my family physician that there was no chance for me. My family also gave me up. My limbs and body were swollen one-third larger than natural, water collected around my heart and I had to be propped up in bed to keep from smothering. I took Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy until I was entirely cured. This was in 1902, and I am now able to do any kind of work on my farm. My cure was certainly marvelous."

L. TURLEY CURD, Wilmore, Ky.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has been wonderfully successful in relieving heart trouble. Its tonic effect upon the heart nerves and muscles is a great factor in assisting nature to overcome heart weakness.
