CANADIAN CLUB HONORS AUTHORS

Beautiful Joe Is a Canadian Dog, Says Marshall Saunders.

GUEST OF DAY

Distinguished Canadian Recounts Early Experiences As a Writer.

It was a delightfully informal talk which Marshall Saunders, distinguished author of Beautiful Joe, gave before the Women's Canadian club yesterday afternoon. It was bright with wit, and full of the little personal incidents which audiences love to hear about persons who have worn a laurel crown. In the audience were members of the local writing profession, special guests of the afternoon, and honored by the Canadian club because it happens to be Book Week.

The Canadian club policy of enter-taining the London writers is not a new one. Last year, Madge Macbeth came as the special speaker, and this year it was Marshall Saunders, and her subject, How I Happened to Become Marshall Saunders evidently began to write just naturally. There was no big upheaval in her life to force her to the pen. It was just a suggestion from the poet, Dr. Theodore Rand, who happened to be a friend of her father, happened to be a friend of her father, and loved to find new recruits for his profession. The suggestion came to the young Marshall Saunders in a letter must choose Spain, about which she knew would make a suitable setting for her story. She must choose Spain, about which she Frof. They had visions of retiring as millionairesses within a few years, on the money earned from Marshall Saunders' pen. They purchased all available magazines from the nearest book shop, took them out into the park, and pro-ceeded to choose a suitable one. A magazine was selected, and story for-warded to the editor. What was the joy of the two sisters when a check for $40 came back. So delighted was the author's sister that she volunteered to look after the housework for the next few weeks, while Marshall Saunders should sit while Marshall Saunders should sit down and write another, perhaps more profitable work. This time, however, the story was rejected. Nothing daunted, the sisters sent it on to a second editor, and a $25 check came back. This was the beginning, and success followed quickly in the life of the young authoress. So she told it to the Canadian club.

She was born into a typical clergy-man's home in Nova Scotia. Sent to school in Edinburgh, her outlook upon life was easily broadened. She tells interesting stories of her life in Scotland—of her monthly pilgrimages to land—of her monthly pilgrimages to the little out-of-the-way Baptist church just so she wouldn't become too Presbyterian. On other Sundays she attended church with the rest of the school girls, who took delight in calling the assistant minister "Baby Face." After writing a short time, she came to the conclusion that she didn't know enough. I must travel some more, she said, and her generous father found the money and she was sent back to Scotland and France. Since then she has lived a gypsy sort of life, spending a great deal of time in travel.
