was soon put out with a Baboock fire extinguisher. The Court street hook and ladder wagon attempted to turn round at the corner of Louisa and Pizabeth streets but the end of the ladders coming in contact with a lamp post the wagon turned completely over. Tom Doughty, Charlie Ardagh, Tom Worrell and Nat Lamb were scated on the back of the wagon, and Frank Smith (foreman) was on the seat with the driver, Charles Dicken. Doughty, Worrell and Lamb saw the ladder strike and jumped clear, but Ardagh, not so fortunate, was penned underneath the load of ladders. Willing hands soon removed them, and he was carried into Beer's saloon. Milligan, the grocery man, ran to his store, 99 Queen street west, and telephoned for the ambulance, but as that was in use, a coupe was secured, and Ardagh was taken home. His legs below the knees are badly bruised, but not broken, and he has sustained a severe shock. Tom Doughty received a bad cut over the right eye. Dicken, the driver, was pitched on his head into the road, but jumped up and grabbed the harses' heads. As soon as he was relieved he was taken to Court street hall, and Dr. Oldright called in. On examination it was found that Dicken's head was badly cut in several places, his legs above the knees were almost bare of skin,

From the St. Catharines Journal. As a number of people were proceeding to church on Sabbath morning, says a Belnont correspondent, they discovered bull in Henry Locke's field tumbling some person, seemingly at will. The alarm was given, and Wm. Locke armed himself with given, and Wm. Looke armed himself with a pump handle, and with a dog hastened to the scene and found his brother Frank apparently in the throes of death. The faithful dog attacked the animal and William dealt him a blow across the ribs, without any apparent effect however. He dealt the enraged creature the second blow behind the ears and felled him to the ground. He then shouted lustly for help from those who were looking on a few ground. He then shouted lustly for help from those who were looking on a few yards distant from the scene, without rendering any assistance. William, with a herculean effort, dragged his brother to the fence and rolled him over it, closely followed by the bull, which began to toss the rails of the fence with rage at the loss of its new.
