

These are only a few examples of communities that have chosen a determined stand against hatred and war. Their work is extremely dangerous, and some attempts have failed tragically.

Building a culture of peace is one way to reduce the likelihood of violent conflict and war. Learning from the communities that have created resistance to war is an essential step in developing new ways to support the strengths of local initiatives and protect local activists in their work for social change.

REFERENCES:

1. Garcia, Ed. (Ed.) 1994. Pilgrim Voices: Citizens as Peacemakers. Ateneo de Manila University Press.
2. Seymoar, Nola-Kate and Juan Ponce de Leon. (1997). Creating Common Unity: Models of Self Empowerment 50 Award Winning Communities. New York: Friends of the UN .
3. http:// www.igc.apc.org /csn/sanjose/index.html
4. <http://nswas.com/ index.html>
5. Langley, Winston E. (1997) Children, a Global Ethic, and Zones of Peace. Peace Review: A Transnational Quarterly, vol. 9, 2.