

254; his foraging expeditions, i. 259; the Canadians complain of them, i. 259-261; his desire to gain the Canadians as allies, i. 260; his speech to the Canadians, i. 261-263; his new method of securing supplies, i. 264; his commissariat, i. 264; issues promissory notes, i. 265; traits of his character, i. 265; exhibits an eager desire for knowledge, i. 266; his keen and subtle genius, i. 266; his character and talents, i. 267; his position as military leader, i. 267; his glaring faults, i. 267; his confidence in Rogers, i. 267; his confidence in Baby, i. 268; his power over his followers, i. 269; sends messengers to Neyon, i. 270, 271; on the arrival of the English convoy at Detroit, i. 272; on the capture of the convoy, i. 273; on the fate of the prisoners of Cuyler's detachment, i. 279, 280; reinforced at Detroit, i. 282; on the capture of the forest posts, i. 297; clings to a delusive hope, i. 302; tries to terrify Gladwyn into submission, i. 302; Gladwyn's contemptuous reply, i. 302; his final effort to win the Canadians, i. 302-304; the reply from the Canadians to, i. 304, 305; joined by the renegade whites, i. 307; derives little aid from his Canadian allies, i. 308; on the schooners at Detroit, i. 312; deserted by the Wyandots and the Pottawattamies, i. 314-316; on the arrival of reinforcements at Detroit, i. 319; Dalzell plans a night attack on, i. 320; his camp on Parent's Creek, i. 321; forewarned of Dalzell's attack,

i. 321, 322; attacks Dalzell, i. 323; the fight of Bloody Bridge, i. 323-329; attacks the "Gladwyn," i. 331; i. 345; invites the Indians of Michilimackinac to join him, i. 346; i. 367, 373; ii. 3, 79; his letter from Neyon, ii. 117; a crushing blow, ii. 117; his cause lost, ii. 117; resolves to dissimulate, ii. 117; his offer of peace to Gladwyn, ii. 118; withdraws to the Manmee, ii. 118; ii. 177, 185, 186, 195; interview of Morris with, ii. 200; his French letter, ii. 201; despair of, ii. 202; ii. 232; sends an embassy to Saint-Ange, ii. 275; among the Western tribes, ii. 276; resolves to defend the Illinois country, ii. 277; assisted by the French traders, ii. 277; the French send forged letters to, ii. 278; his visit to Neyon, ii. 279; fails to incite the Illinois, ii. 280; incited the western tribes to war, ii. 280; his dealings with the Illinois, ii. 281; joined by the Illinois, ii. 281; at Fort Chartres, ii. 281; his interview with Saint-Ange, ii. 281; Saint-Ange declines to aid, ii. 282; his great wampum belt, ii. 282; demands aid from D'Abbadie, ii. 282, 287; his embassy at New Orleans, ii. 287, 292; D'Abbadie receives his embassy, ii. 288; D'Abbadie's reply to, ii. 288; at Kaskaskia, ii. 300; interposes to save Fraser's life, ii. 300; the French traders try to incite, ii. 301; Fraser's council with, ii. 302; his first reception of Fraser, ii. 302; relents, ii. 302; seizes La Garantais, ii. 303; his hopes destroyed, ii.