Aviation in Canada

There seems to be some obstacle at Ottawa to the recognition of the aviation service. It is one of the most and British indicate the immense value of the arm. It has restored the element of surprise to such battles as able to find out what was going on. Their troops were taken by surprise and victory was the result.

Other important services are rendered by the air-men, both offensive and defensive, but our Canadian military authorities still hesitate about ing. They acquiesce in their training, thom to England, and the British autherities esteem our Canadian fliers more highly than their own men.

We can manufacture here, also, and our planes are as good as any, if not better. We fell down on dreadnoughts The senate fell down on us. Even the senate could scarcely object today to the supply of a thousand aeroplanes in lieu of three dreadnoughts.

Perhaps the government has the airmen and their machines under cons loration. There is nothing in Cana a that would to the country or the gov. indigne more credit.

Germans Short of Men

A proof of the scarcity of German MICHIE & CO., LIMITED reserves may be found in the incident of the capture of the Tahure hill. The French in securing this position obles on which the Germans de-

One of these days we may expect a gether, and if one or more of then fail to hold, and the allies have enough men to carry on their drive, the kalser's campaign may crack up and go

These reflections only emphasize the need for men and more men, mumitions and more munitions, for the llies. Every part of every allied nation must do its full share to ensure victory. Canada must do her part, and every men in the country who knows what liberty and civilization may become for him under conditions that will be rid of the harassing burden of militarism as the result of a success ful end to this effort after sane living should be eager and swift to take his place in the ranks of those who cher ish these ideals.

"I don't like the assumption that the city has not the interests of the public at heart," Mr. Fairty said. "It is rather broad."

"I don't care how broad it is, it is obvious enough for any one," Chair man McIntyre replied.

Mr. Ingram then took a hand and remarked that as it was coming near the first of January there might be a remedy.

the first of January there might be a remedy.

H. S. Osler, for the company, argued that the provision regarding stay of proceedings dild not apply in this particular case, and that the board had no jurisdiction to order a railway company to build a line any place it was necessary. Chairman McIntyre, however, pointed out that the question in point in this case was whether or not the company had the right to build.
