

mission there. But that little settlement consists of only a dozen families, and is one hundred miles distant from the nearest missionary, who could visit it only a few times during the year, and that at an expense of from ten to fifteen dollars a trip. In such enterprises, it seems to me, there is but slender promise of permanent gain.

Another method of evangelism is the opening in towns and cities of popular mission halls, with frequent religious services and preaching of the Gospel. This is the method by which the McAll Mission in Paris has accomplished its remarkable work. But there is a wide difference between Paris and Montreal or Quebec. In Paris the mass of the people have broken away from the control of the priests and the church, and dare
