The law is attentive because the ways of thieves, more often than out, are the roads to retribution. And so sociand Yard deigns to walk them.
There are detectives for every class of crime—men who study one branch, and one only. Results are gratifying, busice, worked on a modern business basis, is one of the big successes of the century.
When a policeman casts his uniform and becomes a detective, it is a thore apeculiar proficiency in dealing with a particular crime. His superiors are to slow to notice this and very soon be is a specialist.

For this "specializing" is no child's play. Nor has the word been invented to terrorize offenders. The police have works upon it. They are called "crime classics." Unlike others of the classic lik, they do not bear the stamp of triumphant age, it is true, but they give hints that iVrgil's most inspiring dream never conjured up for him. Several men at the famous head-quarters of our London detectives have actually devoted years to watching one man. One criminal, one detective; costly on the face of it, of course. But actually devoted years to watching one man. One criminal, one detective: costly on the face of it, of course. But read the records. You will see how forgers have been foiled, burglars thwarted ,thieves tripped up at the critical moment, all thru specializing. Opportunities are given the majority of detectives employed at Scotland Yard now to go the rounds of the met-tropolitan police courts in order to study the characters of some of the prison-ers who make their appearance on minor charges, and not only so, but try to discover those in court with court with tained about their belongings whom the prisoners have acquaintance-ship. In the great majority of cases heard po sessed in the way of clothes. at the police courts the prisoners may be observed, upon making their ap-mearance in the dock, to glance round PROHIBITING CHILD LABOR. pearance in the dock, to glance round the court in order to ascertain whether they have any friends present. De-tectives are keen to detect the slighttakes place, they keep a careful watch over the friends, finding out where they live, how they employ their time and whether they are already known to the whether they are already known to the police.

This form of specializing has resulted in many well-known criminal gangs being broken up.
The real detective is born, and as talent flourishes among both rich and poor, it is not surprising to learn that in the ranks of detective specialists are men who began life in the guiter. They can go straight to haunts of crime because they came from there. And what matters it if the yare unable to pass the exam.?
But another type is needed. There is the man from Oxford or Cambridge—the linguist, the mathematician, the scientist. And when such men as these decide to focus their knowledge on the mysteries of crime can we wonder at the results? High-browed men of intellect they are who compass crime like a mariner does the seas, and read guilt or innocence in the eyes of every man they meet.
And if you would see these specialists are the sees of for faces with humor written plainly in lines that laughs have made, or find the most polished and grace clusion laws of the United States; the the employment of child labor. Manufacturer's Sale of Men's and Boys' Overcoats and Suits at less than cost of production.

One of Canada's most prominent clothing firms some few days ago decided to dissolve partnership-to facilitate matters it was necessary to turn their immense stock of fine clothing into cash. We examined the stock carefully and found it was up to Gough standard, which is the one demanded by the discriminating buyer, and made a cash offer, which was much below the cost of production, and to our surprise a few days later it was accepted. The manufacturer loses money on these goods, but "what is one man's adversity is another's gain," and we have decided to let the men and boys of Toronto benefit by our opportunity, though there is no reason on earth why we should not get top prices for this line. Every garment is the handiwork of skilled artisans, made for a high-class trade, and the stock includes all that is new and correct.
