WHAT THEY SAY IN ENGLAND

Good Words for a Toronto Charity—Quite a Compliment. LONDON, May 5.—The Outlook, one of the leading weeklies of London, largely read in Great Britain, says in its issue to-day:

"One could have better spared any educational buildings in the world than the part of McGill University burned down by two successive fires. They were to scientific education, what the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto is to surgery. They were erected by the beneficence of men to whom both Canada and the empire owe much, and in their equipment the minutiae of the best schools in America and Europe were studied. Oxford has long been sighing for the opportunity to equip herself with such an instrument of scientific teaching, but we have no such generous patrons in the older countries, and our government does not take their place. It will take £150,000 or so to repair the loss, and the Montreal is rapidly becoming a city of millionaires, their most beneficence will hardly re-create the sentiment belonging to the physics, mining, engineering and chemistry schools lately given by eminent citizens. In this respect the fire—which it is thought was the work of an incendiary—is irreparable."

In spite of the chill in the air, the boats which have been put on out-of-town trips are doing a big business. The Macassa Saturday morning start over 200 passengers to Hamilton, and probably the same number went over on the afternoon trip.
