THE PREMIER'S MESSAGE.

Premier Whitney's appreciative message of thanks to the people of Ontario was dignified and in excellent spirit. He reiterated his recognition that the decisive endorsement of his policy and administration granted him by the electors came from the province as a whole and while frankly admitting that the government had made mistakes he gives an assurance that the experience they have gained will enable them to be avoided in the future. This is entirely worthy of the premier and the man. The World believes that notwithstanding the special difficulties arising from the feebleness of the opposition Mr. Whitney has the courage and firmness as a public servant to fulfill his duty to the people who have accorded him so signal a mark of their confidence. Certainly no statesman clothed with so absolute a mandate ever had a more commanding opportunity to write his name large on the page of history. Ontario looks to the premier for wise, prescient and progressive legislation, for protection of the provincial resources and franchises, for upright and important administration and for strict loyalty to democratic principles. In that expectation the people will not be disappointed if Mr. Whitney and his colleagues continue to the spirit and temper of his brief but eloquent and impressive message.

EXTEND THE POLLING HOURS.

Altho representative government is not of very recent date it has necessitated constant agitation to secure a fair deal at the polls for laboring people. The exercise of the franchise right both in Canada and the motherland was circumscribed and restricted and the reforms tending to place every elector on a footing of equality have only been obtained by the pressure of public opinion. In this as in other cases of privilege the fight has been between the classes and the masses, and even yet the provisions regulating the taking of the poll are open to the charge of discriminating unfairly between the masters of their own time and the much more numerous body whose time is their employers'.

In Canada we are away behind in our legislation in the matter of regulating elections. The hours for polling throughout the Dominion are made apparently to suit the convenience of the leisured classes. The working man as a rule takes at least as keen an interest in politics as does his brother voter who is better circumstanced, and is equally anxious to cast his ballot according to his best judgment. He is discriminated against, however, in that he has to make a sacrifice to get to the poll, and often is compelled to refrain from exercising his franchise because he does not want to encroach upon his employer's time.

The statutory provision requiring an hour's allowance for voting purposes does not fill the bill. What the working man needs is an extension or change of the hours of polling, so that he can mark his ballot in his own time. The polls here should be kept open till 8 o'clock at night as is the case in Britain. Mr. Whitney has given a secret ballot, he should now go farther and give the laboring man a proper opportunity to exercise his right. Sir Wilfrid Laurier can also show himself to be in the line of progress by placing a similar reform on the statute book against the next Dominion election.

GERMAN BURGOMASTERS IN LONDON.

In the latter part of May a large and representative delegation of German burgomasters visited London and received a very cordial welcome, which Dr. Adickes of Frankfurt-am-Main, declared far surpassed their expectations. The exchange of opinion and sentiment and their experiences in the Imperial capital evidently created the liveliest satisfaction and this visit has confirmed the view that sees in these friendly and social amenities a valuable contribution to the cause of international peace. As usual the king personally received and entertained the German municipal dignitaries, a courtesy which elicited favorable appreciation and will certainly tend to assist the movement making for better relations between Britain and the fatherland.

The burgomaster in Germany is specially trained for the position, serving his apprenticeship in the smaller communities, their records being carefully watched and those of those exhibiting marked ability gradually move upwards till they are selected for the great cities of the empire. The impressions of these latter officials regarding the administrative methods of British cities are thus of more than ordinary importance and it is interesting to learn, on the authority of Dr. Matthes, burgomaster of Stuttgart, that Germans can learn a lot in Britain and that he himself had gained many a valuable hint. Dr. Adickes, Dr. Matthes, Herr von Borsecht, chief burgomaster of Munich, and Herr Wieland, burgomaster of Munich, each gave interviews on the eve of their return to Germany and it is instructive to find them in substantial agreement as to the points that particularly appealed to them.

All of them were struck by the great self-control of the London population, the efficiency and politeness of the police and the absence of the military methods prevalent in Germany. They marked the excellent condition of the streets and roads and the strict regulation of the traffic. Another matter that perhaps naturally appealed to visitors accustomed to strict German regulations was the greater liberty people in London seemed to enjoy, exemplified for instance in the treatment of the public parks, and the real use made of them for purposes of recreation. Herr Wieland in particular described the close connection between work and recreation in London as affording matter of thought, "producing as it does so much working power." The typical English life the German burgomasters found in the combination of a dignified and traditional atmosphere with the progressive spirit and as the final result they expected from their visit a beneficial influence in favor of a rapprochement and friendly relations between the two Teutonic nations.

Tales of a Store.

No. 10.

It is interesting and instructive to watch the stone carvers at work ornamenting the "caps" of the new building of the Robert Simpson Co., Limited. Stone carving is an art not practised by stone cutters in general. It is done by a special class of men, who undergo a long period of apprenticeship. Stone carving ranks really as a fine art equal to the work of the figure sculptor, but it lacks the dignity of sculpture in the strict sense, because the imaginative quality of the latter is required in the carving of stone ornamentation. Properly, however, it is called "architectural sculpture."

The caps of the new store of the Robert Simpson Co., Limited, are being carved in the style known as Italian Renaissance. The advantage of this style is that it gives great scope for variety of designs, from floral decorations to figure work alone and in combination.

Every cap of the new store of the Robert Simpson Co., Limited, will be of a different design, and the effects will be beautiful and striking. Some of these may now be seen from the street.

SIN IS REAL

And New Theologies Which Say Contrary Are Not True.

A ministerial session was held yesterday in connection with the annual Toronto Methodist conference which will begin its general sessions at the Elm-street church to-day.

Rev. Dr. Carman, general superintendent, preached the inaugural sermon in the morning. Referring to the recent election Dr. Carman said: "For my own, I am confident that the government will appreciate the confidence that the people of Ontario have reposed in them, and will remove what the people of Ontario desire to be removed in connection with the temperance question."

Dr. Carman also referred to the many new theologies which are being published at the present time. He described them as contrary to the teachings both of the Bible and the church. The most false was the teaching that sin was not real.

ARCHBISHOP'S FAREWELL TO PARISH SOCIETIES

His Grace of Toronto Refuses to Accept Any Presentation, But Speaks Well of Work Done.

Last Sunday afternoon in St. Michael's Cathedral Archbishop O'Connor met the different societies of St. Michael's parish, including the Altar Society, the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the St. Vincent de Paul, the children, and the confraternity of Christian Doctrine. These gathered in the cathedral to hear what they considered to be the farewell words of his grace, but were pleased to learn from his own remarks that it was not his farewell. For, as he said, he was born here, educated here, was a priest and bishop here, and that he wished to die here, and be buried here with some of his friends.

After cheering the hearts of the children and clergymen by the consoling words that it was not his farewell, but that he was going to remain with them, his grace addressed the societies on the virtue of charity, love of God, and developed his subject along the lines of the work of each society. He praised the Altar Society for its faithfulness in keeping the altars so tastefully arranged as to add to the devotion of those who worship in St. Michael's. He congratulated the members of the Sodality on their zealous observance of their rules, which made them worthy children of Mary. To the members of the St. Vincent de Paul he extended his heartfelt appreciation of the noble work they did among the poor. Never, he said, did they realize how dear that society was to him. His grace then encouraged all to continue the good work as long as strength permitted, and consequently a stronger man. His grace concluded by thanking all for the kindness shown him and for the hearty and successful work of his children, which support he hoped would be given to his successor. Asking the people to pray for him and assuring them they would be remembered in his prayers, he concluded the service with the benediction of the most blessed sacrament.

His grace characteristically refused any presentation or address that the different societies might make, warning them, in fact, that he would do all the addressing. He would never allow anyone to sing his praises or sing his good works.

Notwithstanding this, Rev. Father Whelan, rector of the cathedral, in the society's address, made a very true eulogy of Archbishop O'Connor and his work. He said it was not unbefitting of him on this occasion to make a few remarks concerning the personality of the one about to take his departure. He said he knew him as a priest, a bishop, and an archbishop. He could as a boy, a young man, a priest, give testimony of his work. As a professor and a superior he was, he said, encouraging, sympathetic and quite approachable. As prince of the church, he was a leader. But the society's address was not of restoring 30 years ago the church's plain song, shows that his foresight in this aid to religion has been lately verified by the holy father in his encyclical on church music. Again, his ability as a churchman is discerned in the way he has taken in all that pertains to Christian doctrine. This subject was ordered by him to be taught in the schools according to curriculum, with regular written examinations, and under the supervision of a diocesan inspector, a fact which proved that he possessed the Pope's encyclical on Christian doctrine, and lastly, we have more than sufficient evidence to believe that the society's address was not of restoring 30 years ago the church's plain song, shows that his foresight in this aid to religion has been lately verified by the holy father in his encyclical on church music.
