PLAYS AND PLAYERS
Sweet Clover, that charming pastoral play that carries with it the odor of wild flowers and the smiling country, was well produced in the Opera House last evening by an exceptionally strong company. Last season it made its first appearance here with Otis B. Thayer in the star part. This season, although Mr. Thayer is missing, his place is well taken by Elmer Thayer and the performance suffers not one whit by comparison. Mr. Thayer has a splendid conception of his part, and handles it in a manner that leaves no room for criticism. Miss Calhoun was delightfully natural as Lois, and was at all times, quiet to the demands upon her. In her emotional lines she showed much strength and talent. Miss Carolyn Lee, as Aunt Abigail, did excellent character work in two widely differing parts. Robert Robson as Job Mason made one of the hits of the piece, and evoked much laughter in his proposal scene. C. Tapley Sturtevant as Elbridge Groverman, was excellent. In the third act he was especially good. Frederick Harold, as Albert Slade, had a difficult role, but he handled it artistically, and made a first class impression. The other members of the company did good work in minor parts. There were certain points in every act, and altogether the performance was a splendid one. Sweet Clover will be repeated tonight and on Wednesday and Thursday the bill will be The Dixie Girl.
The appearance in St. John of Miss Rosalie De Vaux, who is a favorite in St. John and was very popular during the visit of the Dailey Stock Company two seasons ago in "The broad white way" on his own account. He has a company out playing "What happened to Jones." His friends will be glad to learn that he has more than made good.
The "Sweet Clover" company will also disband at the close of their engagement here. They have had a very successful season of 46 weeks which comes pretty near to being a record.
N. P. Jellison, who is a favorite in St. John and was very popular during the visit of the Dailey Stock Company two seasons ago in "The broad white way" on his own account. He has a company out playing "What happened to Jones." His friends will be glad to learn that he has more than made good.

Mme. Schumann-Heink sails in July for Bremen, to take part in the Wagner-Mozart festival to be held there in August.
It is said that Forbes Robertson will be seen in America next season in a dramatization of the "Right of Way," in which Kyle Belieu was to have appeared.
Francis Wilson has written a comedy with music called "Little Dolly Walters," which will be produced in New York next season.
A sixteen year old playright is appearing on the Bowery, New York, in his dramatized version of the Taranova case, which recently caused such a sensation in New York. The play is in Yiddish.
Julia Nelson and Fred Terry are contemplating a tour of America next season, in "Dorothy of the Hall," one of the successes of the London season. It is said also that arrangements have been made about completed for an American tour by Ellen Terry, in "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire."

THESE MILK SAMPLES
With reference to the statement in Saturday's Times concerning the analysis of a sample of Bloomfield milk by the bacteriologist of McGill University, Dr. G. A. B. Addy states that while he gave Mr. Lawson a sample of milk out of the same can from which was taken the sample which he himself examined for type and germ, the bottle in which Mr. Lawson carried away the sample was not sealed in his presence, as was stated in this paper. It was the original can that was resealed—and not the bottle containing the sample.

INTERESTING LECTURE
H. G. Robinson Gave Splendid Demonstration of Marconi Wireless in York Theatre Last Night.
The intricacies and wonders of the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy were illustrated last night in the York Theatre, when H. G. Robinson, the representative of the underwriters, who are conducting the financial interests of the Marconi Company, delivered a very interesting lecture dealing with the past and present value of the utility and future possibilities of the Marconi system.
The stage was fitted up as a miniature receiving station, with an aerial and accompanying receiving apparatus coherer and Morse ink tape machine. Besides these there were a railroad semaphore, fog alarm and set of six lights, it being shown in turn how effectively each could be operated by a sending apparatus placed in the vestibule of the theatre.
The lecturer, in his opening remarks, said he would make no attempt to prove that wireless telegraphy was a success, as that was being abundantly demonstrated by the numerous stations around the world. He was there to explain in technical language the various uses to which the discovery was being and would be put. After tracing the evolution of the system, starting with the discovery of other by Prof. Herz and of the vibration of the particles in it which were called Hertzian waves, he alluded to the further efforts made by Lodge to so regulate the motive force which discharges the waves and to which Tesla, Edison and Kelvin contributed.
Coming down to 1893, the lecturer spoke of Marconi, who was then an Oxford undergraduate, and who one being left a fortune, devoted his time, energies and money to the elucidation of the problem which had baffled his predecessors.
The lecturer showed how well he succeeded in perfecting the system which is in use today. One of his most recent patents was a machine which printed messages at 200 words a minute.
After referring to the coherer, which he described as Marconi's greatest invention, Mr. Robinson described in detail the various parts of the receiving and sending apparatus, which were shown in operation in connection with the railroad semaphore, which was also operated, he mentioned the fact that already four railways in the States, including the New York Central, had adopted the Marconi signalling switch system.
In concluding his interesting lecture, Mr. Robinson gave several instances in which the Marconi system had prevented loss of life and prevented delay in salvage, and also alluded to the fact that Lloyd underwriters had adopted it, and gave figures to show that the financial outlook for the company, after being only five years in existence, was more favorable as regards dividend earning powers than such gift-edged undertakings as the Bell telephone and Western Union companies were in their earlier stages of existence.
The lecture will be repeated, with wireless demonstrations, this evening and during the week.
Some of the suburbanites at Renforth were given a scare on Sunday evening when the cottages of J. H. Pullen and E. B. Seely caught fire. The blaze originated from the chimney in both cases, but was checked before a great deal of damage was done. The occupants of the cottages were, however, given quite a scare, as there is no means of properly fighting a fire in these dwellings.
