The recent history of the canning inustry on the Fraser river is knowledge and need not be discussed here, but it affords reasons why the canners may perhaps think it expedient to deal with some of the fishermen in this way, which indeed was stated to be a practice common among the can-ners on the river. Even if the practice was adopted to avoid coming under the act, of which there is no evidence, nor was this even suggested, the sole question I have to determine would still remain, are the appellants, in the cir-

The answer depends up struction of R. S. B. C. c. 167, s. 2, s. s. 4, as amended by 62 Vic., c. 66, 3.2.

The former provides (1) the furnishing of a boat, etc., by a canner to a fisherman or other person in return for a portion of the fish to be caught, in of the catch being large or small or an average one; and (2) an agreement for tion of the fish at a certain price in The amendment extends the liability
