Foster vs. Coigdarippe was the last case on the list. Defendant claimed that he leased part of his ranch in Metchosin to defendant while absent on a visit to France, and that the rent was unpaid. After returning, the plaintiff's cow strayed onto Coigdarippe's premises, and he seized it for rent, and handed it over to Hinkson Siddall to sell. The latter drove the cow to town—about 14 miles—and sold it at auction for $58. Foster then sued for illegal distress, and amongst other matters pleaded in support of his claim, an old statute of the support of the company.
