Rev. C. D. Schofield brought forward the matter of King's College and Dathousie College Amalgamation. He felt that the question deeply concerned the Synod and referred to the weight which the synod's judgment had had whenever the question of union had come up. It could be accepted that in the present session there would be been the movement for rkers, but would be born the movement for lessons and offering of prayer preceded the deadersess.

Solving the problem of higher education in the maritime provinces, it was thought that if the movement really began, the outcome would undoubtedly be realized in the establishment of a great collegiate centre. If Kings and Dalhousie began the movement they would have a centre toward which all the other colleges must eventually comes. Dalhousie. The church would be open to the taunts that it was unable to keep its divinity college from extinction. Personally he saw no hope for the pleasant picture which had been drawn for a great educational centre. Regarding the absorption of all the maritime province colleges into a common centre in which Dalhousie and King's would be the pioneers, he felt that before the University of New Brunswick became a portion of the union, the legislature of New Brunswick would manifest itself. He had no hesitation in claiming that the proposed amalgamation, if carried out, would be nothing more or less than a moral fraud. Was the synod to be recreant in duty and sacrifice the college when vigorous action in its behalf would again build it up to have it a tultwark of church strength and influence?

The justice reviewed the late expenses of $20,000 capital being absorbed in currents. Manufacture is a supplementation of the strength and influence?

The second night I was under her care I asked her to summon one of the house doctors to relieve a bandage from my knee which was causing me terrible pain. She seemed anxious to look after me herself and finally brought me a drink, which, she said, would put me to sleep and relieve the pain.

"I began to feel a numbness in my arms and I felt as if I were partially paralyzed. Then Miss Toppan placed her nurse's cap on a stand and lay beside me on the bed. She placed her arms about my neck and for five or 10 minutes she rocked my head as if I were a baby. Very often she kissed me, and I don't know how many times she told me not to mind the pain and that I would be all right in the pain and that I would be all right in a little while. Every few seconds she would raise her head and gaze into my eyes with an expression I could not understand. All the time her black eyes were blazing in the moonlight as if they were on fire.

JESSE JAMES REBURIED.

Body of the Missouri Bandit King Placed in Family Lot After Twenty Years.

Kearney, Mo., July 1.-The body of Jesse James, Missouri's bandit king, was buried today for the last time in the Bap-tist graveyard here. The body, which had rested since his tragic death at the hands of "Bob" Ford, in St. Joseph, in 1882, was disinterred this morning, placed in a new black casket and was buried by the side of his wife and little brother in the family lot in the cemetery on the edge of the town.

Frank James came here three days ago, grip, and was not at the station to meet the funeral party. Neither was Jesse James, jr. He had come down from Kan-sas City the night before.

The little crowd waded through the mud and held a levee, with Frank propped up in bed on pillows. Frank did not gaze on his dead brother, nor did the aged mother. Only young Jesse looked on his father when the seal of the grave was broken. Jesse and his helpers took the long drive out to the old home and with ong drive out to the old home, and with own to the casket.

This, at the time of the burial 20 years ago, was supposed to be one of the finest made, a solid metallic affair, air tight and indestructible. The casket, however, was merely a sheet iron box riveted loosely together and had rusted to pieces years ago. The body was supposed to have been embalmed, but the indications are that no embalming fluid had ever touched it, To Prote the French Marine Interests.
