CHNA supports censuring students

by Jonathan Stone

If you're a naughty student, then you may have a hard time finding a job after you graduate.

That is the message the College Hill Neighborhood Association is trying to convey if it gets its way with the university administration.

The CHNA, in a recent newsletter, has supported the censuring of students misbehaving in their neighborhood, and is trying to persuade the administration to record this information on students' academic transcripts.

"We would like that there would be some sort of mark on their record at university," said Dawn DeCoursey, secretary-treasurer of the CHNA.

"Prospective employers could then consult both the transcript and the list-to know what they're getting," stated the newsletter in a section on UNB.

The neighborhood in question is any street below King's College and above the train tracks, and from Windsor to Regent.

According to the newsletter, "The administration of UNB has not been very understanding of the neighborhood's problems—taking the view...that student behavior is a police problem and a neighborhood problem, not their problem."

"We would like to have the university and the city working together," said DeCoursey, "They (UNB) feel we are to pass those things onto the police."

"It's not the majority of students - just a handful, but a big handful," she added.

CHNA president George Bidlake says they have not made much progress with the administration.

"All we've heard is that there is nothing they can do, or will do."

Eric Garland, Associate Vice-President of Administration, says he had just recently received the newsletter and was concerned with its contents.

"As far as I know, I don't think it (censuring) has been discussed," said Garland, "That's something the university will have to decide when the details come to us."

He added that he has not had a formal meeting with the CHNA since last spring, although he is supportive of some of the group's goals.

Bidlake's main concern is the amount of broken beer bottles left in the mornings. "There are lots of children, dogs and vehicles in the area which can be harmed by broken glass," he said.

He cited a policy at St. FX where students are fined $100 for possession of beer bottles instead of the preferred and safer use of cans.

"We need the students on our side to make this a lovely neighborhood in which to live," he said.

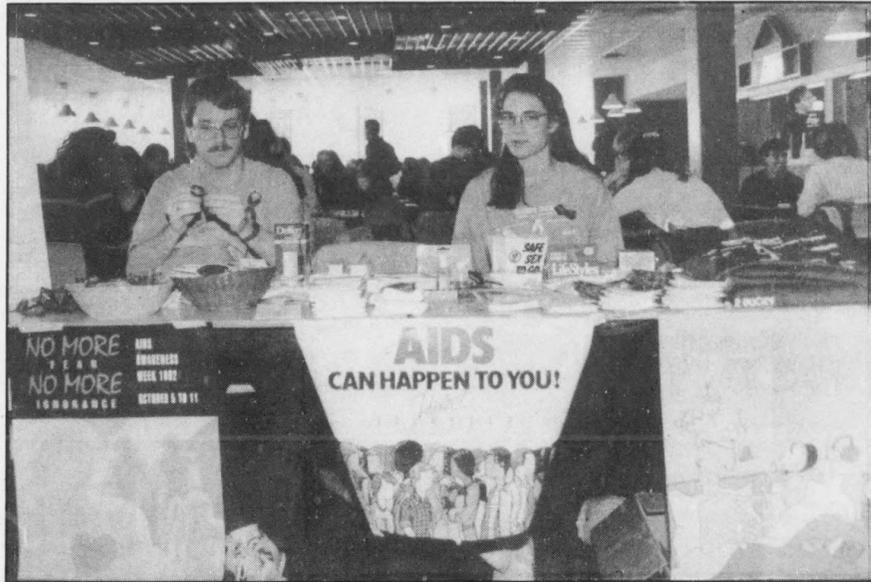

So far this term, the Fredericton City Police report over 105 calls within the CHNA's boundaries, most of which pertain to late-night partying and liquor control.

As far as the censure question, "That's not something the police are getting involved with," said Constable Katherine Alcorn, who is working out of a Mobile Community Police Unit that has patrolled the area.

"We are independent of the CHNA, we are there as an agent of the city."

Alcorn explained that the Mobile Unit spends time all over the city, wherever specific problems arise.

AIDS Awareness Week at UNB

by Murray Carew

This week is AIDS Awareness Week and the UNB SWAT (Sex Without AIDS Today) Team and the UNB Student Union have been in full gear informing students about safer sex and sexually transmitted diseases.

During the week, members of SWAT set up information tables at the campus cafeterias where students were able to obtain information about safer sex, HIV, AIDS and other transmitted diseases.

In addition, members of SWAT gave out condoms and SWAT also sold t-shirts with proceeds being used to help SWAT continue to promote AIDS awareness on campus.

SWAT is a peer educators program which is run by volunteer students with the guidance of Grace Getty, co-ordinator of UNB's AIDS program. Students who are SWAT peer educators have to take a twenty hour program which prepares them to discuss Sexually transmitted diseases, AIDS and safer sex.

SWAT members also help students clarify any myths which they may have about AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, discuss how to carry out safer sex practices and learn how to communicate with their sexual partners about safer sex.

Getty says that it is important to continue SWAT's efforts because the threat from AIDS is greater than ever.

"AIDS is still on the increase in Canada, and it's increasing fastest among young heterosexuals," she explained.

"Statistics suggest that one out of every four or five Canadian university students either has

New Secretary at UNB

by Karen Burgess

UNB has a new University Secretary. Stephen Strople was recently appointed to the position, which was left vacant by the resignation of Dr. Roger Ploude.

In a letter to members of the UNB Fredericton Senate and Board of Governors dated August 26, 1992, Ploude explained the reasons for his resignation.

Ploude served one year of a five year term, but stated that "the job was not at all what (he) expected."

He states that he felt the academic and administrative experience he gained in his previous position, as Chair of the English Department, was not sufficiently utilized in the Secretarial position.

He says that he was willing to perform the clerical duties involved with the position, but continued "I needed to feel that there was more to my duties than clerical assignments, which by themselves I find neither sufficiently rewarding nor challenging to keep me in the office for another four years."

Ploude says the decision to resign was difficult, but after consideration he concluded to return to teaching full-time where he feels his "talent, training, and expertise will be more fully employed."
