Monday the 18th of May, the Duke of Richmond brought forward a Bill in the House of Lords for the total abolition of lay patronage in the Church of Scotland. This Bill, which is a Government one, is very short, consisting of nine clauses. It empowers the Crown to surrender the right and trust of nominating to Crown livings. There are 294 livings of which the Crown is sole patron, while in 34 others in given to "communicants," by which word the Duke afterwards explained that he meant only make communicants. To all private patrons the Bill proposes to give, as compensation for the surrender of the meant only make communicants.
