LIEUT. COLONEL INNES AT VIMY

Lieut.-Colonel Robert Innes, formerly officer commanding the 106th Battalion has successfully passed through the terrible fighting at Vimy Ridge and came out without a wound. Colonel Innes must come of good fighting stock (his father Peter Innes, Esq., was never afraid to enter the lists against any adversary in a wordy battle). When he found himself among a lot of others in a surplus list of Canadian officers he was most determined to get to the fighting line. In writing to Mrs. Joy of Truro referring to the death of her son the noble Major Joy he said: "Ned had done good work and his death was not in vain as his men, seeing him fall carried on with added vigor driving the Boche from their positions and killing the swine in hundreds making the operation an entire success."

It is hard that only by the passing of such men as Ned that civilization can be maintained against the accursed ambition of the heathenish Hun. Those who came through the fight and who live to fight again are more determined than ever to demand and receive more than full compensation for those who have made the supreme sacrifice.

Major Joy was formerly an officer under Colonel Innes in the 106th and went to France and the two fought in the same battle at Vimy—one to yield his life and the other to be spared for further duty and sacrifice for his country.
