CHAPTER XXXI.

THE CONFESSION.

"Major Grant wishes to see him," was the reply.

"Take him, then; but send him out again soon," was the ungracious consent.

And Mrs. Grant led little Frankie into her own room.

"Had you better not speak to your sister? I wish to have this matter attended to without delay. Speak to Mrs. Whitney, please. Grant need not know it now," said Major Grant.

His wife quickly returned to the door and called Mrs. Whitney.

"Please to come here one moment—Major Grant wishes to see you."

Mrs. Whitney came hastily into the room. She could not afford to displease Major Grant.

He motioned her to a seat, and then said:

"Mrs. Grant has been telling me a strange story. They say that truth is stranger than fiction; and I believe it. There are some romances in real life which would be far more thrilling than the works of fiction, if they could be written out. I wish to ask you something about your adopted son."

"Anything you please, dear uncle."

"Do you love him as you do your own?"

"No, indeed. That would be impossible," she answered, smiling.

"Will you give that child to me?" he asked.

Mrs. Grant sat upon a low footstool by her husband's side. He passed one arm around her shoulders and drew her head upon his bosom as he lay upon the low couch.

Her face was turned away from Mrs. Whitney, who was undecided what answer to make.

BEAVER FLOUR

combines the rich gluten of Manitoba Spring wheat and the lighter, but equally important, properties of Ontario Fall wheat. The two combined form a perfectly blended flour that makes bread light, white, nutritious and extremely palatable, while pastry made with Beaver Flour has a crisp, flaky texture that brings many a compliment to the cook.

You don't need to be an expert in baking to attain the best results with BEAVER FLOUR.

But if you are an expert, you will readily recognize its incomparable qualities.

Your grocer has BEAVER FLOUR, and will recommend it.

TYRESIDE, P. O., ONT.

The pain across my back and kidneys has almost entirely gone and I am better than I have been for years. I strongly advise all women who suffer from Pain in the Back and Weak Kidneys, to try Gin Pills."

member you and your husband. Besides this, you will always have the satisfaction of having done a good action, and that will comfort you. God bless you for this, my dear niece."

Mrs. Grant was holding her boy to her heart, and weeping softly over him.

As Mrs. Whitney arose to leave the room, she said:

"You can have the clothing belonging to Frank, if you wish for it."

"The little baby dress, and skirts, and blankets I should like," was the reply.

"Come, then," responded Mrs. Whitney.

The two women left the room together.

"You have triumphed!" sneered Mrs. Whitney when they were in the hall.

"Oh, Belle, aren't you glad that I have done no worse? Aren't you glad that I am alive?"

"Glad? No, I'm sorry," was the cruel retort.

Entering the room where the articles of clothing belonging to the infant were kept, Mrs. Whitney tossed them scornfully into her husband's hands, and said:

"There, take your brat's rags! I suppose you will turn me out of house and home for this."

"Oh, Sister Belle, I will never be unkind to you any more. I will always love you, and we will be so happy together—you and I, with our husbands and children. You will forget all the past and forgive me, won't you, Belle?"

"No, I won't!" returned Mrs. Whitney. "I will neither forgive nor forget. Go, now!"

Mrs. Grant went away weeping.

The little garments she put away, and then returned to Major Grant, who was caressing the little boy.

Mrs. Grant held up the warm flannel nightdress, and little Frankie ran to her to be undressed and put to bed.

"You are to stay with me all night, and sleep with me, too, you blessed little pet!" said she joyfully.

"Truly? Am I to sleep with you?" cried the delighted child.

"Yes, truly. Now kiss our good, kind friend, here, and say good night."

"You may call me papa, for you are to be my little boy now—mine and mamma's—there! Good night, my little son," said Major Grant.

"Good night, papa. Are you truly my mamma?" he asked, clinging to Mrs. Grant's hand, and skipping along by her side.

"Yes, my love, I am your own true mamma. Now, kneel down and say your prayers, and then we will go to sleep."

Little Frank knelt down and repeated the prayer taught him by Mrs. Grant long ago, and then she opened the sony bed and placed him tenderly between the blankets.

"Now you come, too," he asked.

Lying down beside her boy, the woman's heart thrilled with the perfect bliss of mother-love as the plump little arms encircled her neck and the red, ripe lips met her own. Oh, the blessing, the comfort of the little, clinging baby arms! There is no joy in all the world like that brought to a mother's heart by the caress of her child.

In a few moments little Frankie was asleep, and with many a loving kiss Mrs. Grant went away and left him sleeping quietly in her own bed.

At the door she paused and looking back to make sure that she was not dreaming. Returning for one more kiss, she thanked God for leading her feet from the miry clay and placing them upon the rock of happiness, and she attended to the wants of her invalid husband with a light and joyful heart. Then, after he was sleeping quietly, she returned to her own couch, where little Frankie awaited her, and for once she slept with her baby in her arms and his face upon her bosom.

CHAPTER XXXII.

DEEDS OF DARKNESS.

When Mrs. Grant awoke the next morning, after her child had been restored to her, it was with a feeling of intense joy in her heart, and for a moment she wondered at the unusual sensation.

Life had held so much misery, and so little joy for her, since she had tasted of love's sweet cup, that the one bright ray of sunshine was a stranger in her heart.

Frankie's little arms about her neck brought it all back to her, all her misery and repentance; but putting all this aside, she enjoyed the happiness left to her.

Her heart was lightened of its load by her recent confession to her husband, and although she felt a blush of shame steal to her cheek as she remembered that she had humbled her pride, and told him all, she was, nevertheless, all the happier for having done so.

"I will begin life anew. Henceforth I will conceal nothing, then I shall have nothing to confess, nothing to regret," she said, aloud.

Her voice awoke Frankie, and after an hour of playful enjoyment with her child, Mrs. Grant arose.

After making a neat but hasty toilet, little Frankie was taken to the bath by his delighted mother, who next proceeded to dress him with her own hands.

After this was done she left him in Josephine's care, while she went to Major Grant's room with a smiling face. He greeted her pleasantly, and remarking upon the beauty of the morning, added:

"You will ride over to the city to-day, my love? You will remember that I shall have company. Lawyer Mellen will come out and attend to some little matters of business I have on hand. Take Frankie with you."

Well pleased with the thought of a journey to the city with her darling boy, Mrs. Grant consented and hasty preparations were made for the ride.

After breakfast Frank was dressed in his best new suit, feeling as grand as a king, strutted about the house, announcing to all the household the important fact that he was "going over to the city to spend the day."
