SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

HOW ARE YOUR TERMINAL FACILITIES?

Are your terminal facilities good? That is are you able to extricate yourself from a group or a conversation as gracefully as you entered it? Or do you sometimes find yourself at a loss how to stop a conversation or leave a group, and go on talking or standing because you cannot think of an excuse?

The Telephone Guests That Stay Too Long.

How often telephone conversations are prolonged because neither party seems to know just how to terminate them without seeming abrupt or awkward. Of course it is the place of the one who calls up to say goodbye, just as she would if she were making a personal call instead of calling over the wire. But apparently she cannot find just the right moment or the right word to do it, and the conversation dies down and then starts up again while the telephone hostess sniffs the air to see if her cake is burning, or squirms uneasily when her husband calls from the other room: "Do you know that you've been talking a half an hour? Cut it out. Someone else may want to use that line once in awhile."

The change to the bottle

The change from the mother's life-giving milk to other diet is always a time of difficulty—and sometimes of danger—for Baby.

At this critical period be sure to give Virol to your child, because Virol contains those vital principles which are essential to growth and development.

Virol is assimilated by the youngest and feeblest digestions, and ensures firm flesh, strong bones, and good colour.

VIROL
Virol is used in more than 3,000 Infant Clinics and Hospitals in Great Britain. Try it.

If your own terminal facilities are none too good there is one advantage you can get out of that weakness. And that is that you can learn from your own difficulties that what may appear awkwardness or abruptness or tiresomeness in others is often only the result of their similar difficulties.

Futile Strife Blamed for World Ills

London, June 15.—Sir Oliver Lodge, who believes that he has bridged the gap between life and after-life, has found that the ill of the world are due to the futile, petty strife of puny men.

Addressing the Westbourne Park chapel congregation Sunday, Sir Oliver condemned the slums of the East End of London, saying that men weren't intended to live like that and that the East End ought to be a garden of Eden.

"Through evolution," he said, "such a spot could become a paradise. Here we are in this wonderful place, in a system of worlds," he continued, "being little creatures crawling about on the surface of this planet, most of us trying to do the best we can to hinder the efforts of others. Some misguided persons are annihilating each other, believing that in that way they can secure a place for themselves in the sun. That isn't the way toward progress."

Sir Oliver pleaded for co-operation among persons, pointing to the beauty permeating the universe. "Few men want to go wrong," he said. "We all want to do right. We are all weary of making mistakes, but we don't look at life squarely. We are slaves to ancestral trouble that we haven't outgrown. We haven't the perfect freedom that comes when our wills are our own."

Angler's Struggle With Human Fish

An exciting contest between a "human fish" on the end of a line and an angler, armed with a light 10-foot rod, was witnessed at Bath Municipal Baths.

The "fish," Professor Bob Canning, a well-known swimmer, had challenged Dr. Charles Begg, a noted West Country angler, declaring that he would resist the doctor's efforts to "land" him for 15 minutes.

In full fishing rig, including waders and heavy boots, Dr. Begg commenced to play Canning, who was attached to the angler's line by a special head-gear, designed by the doctor.

At times the rod was bent almost double by the efforts of the "fish," but the angler always appeared to have the game well in hand, and after skillfully playing his catch for 7 min. 35 sec., drew the exhausted "fish" to the side of the bath, thus winning the contest with over seven minutes to spare. Eighteen years ago the two had a similar contest. On that occasion the doctor landed Canning in 8 min. 35 sec.

SULPICIAN OFFERS PROPERTY IN VILLERAY WARD TO CITY.

The extreme northern part of the city will boast another large park in the near future if plans which are now being formulated become a reality. It was stated in city hall circles this morning that the Gentlemen of St. Sulpice were ready to lease the central section of their Ville-Marie property in Villeray ward provided that the streets which border on this property are opened and they enjoy tax exemption until all the bordering lots are sold. If this offer is accepted, and there is every indication that it will, the residents of this section of the city will have a park at their disposal which will be equal to Lafontaine in area.

The property measures about 150 acres and is located between St. Hubert, St. Michael's Road, 42nd Avenue and Cartier St. Altogether the property in question measures about 700 acres but the city will be limited to 150 of them. With the opening of this park the city will boast a total of 75 of these breathing spaces in all.

RENUNCIATION IN N.S. ELECTION ON PLATFORM OF KEEPING PULPWOOD FOR CANADIAN INDUSTRY.

HALIFAX.—Frank J. D. Barnjum, the active protagonist of the pulpwood embargo proposal, has announced himself as a candidate of the Conservative party for Queen's County in the forthcoming provincial election. A life-long Liberal, he is opposing a further return to power of the Liberal Government which has held office continuously for 43 years. He believes that with better business in government taxes can be reduced.

Mr. Barnjum advocates the development of Canada's pulpwood resources for the manufacture of paper in Canada. He wants to see a 200-ton paper mill erected on the watershed of the Mersey River, "which controls the largest and finest waterpower in the Maritime provinces." The benefits of such an industry, he points out would be felt throughout the province.

The initial expenditure for the erection of the plant and development of power alone will exceed the sum of five million dollars. The amount of pulpwood required to keep a mill of this size in operation will amount to more than all the wood that is now being exported by the farmers in the entire province of Nova Scotia, and will entail the distribution of more than a million dollars through the province annually, for pulpwood alone, together with an annual expenditure for labor of five hundred thousand dollars in the operation of the mills. This is entirely outside of the purchase of materials and supplies and the support of the large number that would be indirectly connected with an industry of this size.

The class of towns that are built up around a paper mill are the finest of any towns to be found in Canada today, and as an example of this I will merely refer to the towns of Grand Mere in Quebec and Iroquois Falls in Ontario, which are probably the two model towns in the entire country.

I care not how many new paper mills may now be building in Canada, can be manufactured at a lower cost price at Liverpool than at any location on this continent. These new mills building in Canada are, by the way, largely the result of my campaign for an embargo on pulpwood.

A Little Sense of Humour

By Mrs. Joseph Conrad. As a nation we can hardly be accused of being joyous. Most of us cannot even look pleased or mildly interested. The grim, solemn faces one sees at theatres, dances, and—what is even less comprehensible—around a well-spread table have many times amused me.

A little sense of humour would ease that gloom, and would also go far to prevent us from making ourselves ridiculous.

The wording of our memorial references to those near and dear to us, for instance, is often rendered absurd or irreverent simply by our lack of humour. I once saw in a London newspaper the lines:

To the memory of dear father. His end was peace. With God all things are possible.

It is certain that the notice was meant to show real sorrow and affectionate regret, but the careless use of words robs it of all dignity and solemnity. No one with any sense of humour could have failed to notice the incongruous note.

But is this, which appeared in a local paper, unconscious humour, or can one detect a certain suspicion of spiteful sarcasm?

Mrs. C. wishes to thank all friends for sympathy, etc., and for flowers sent, mostly artificial. Let me quote another instance within my own experience. When a famous young novelist died in the Black Forest, where he had been taken in the hope of saving his life, his wife, whom we knew very well, was with him; also a favourite dog. In this case her lack of humour was disastrous. Her wire announcing the death read as follows: "God took—at 11.5. Make some arrangement for me to get the dog home."
