Destroyers in Deadly Buel. The Japanese destroyer Sasannami dvanced from the lines to meet the dmiral's destroyer, and she glided through the water, pouring in a terible and close fire. The Biedovy became disabled and was unable to use her steering gear, which had been shattered. It was now that Rojestvensky and is chief of staff were wounded again, and this time the admiral was serious

y injured. The Biedovy was boarded by the crew of the Sasannami. The Japanese searched high and low All the Russians on the Biedovy were made prisoners, and Rojestvensky was the last man to be discovered. He was found hiding in the bottom of the destroyer, bleeding freely from many The admiral, who arrived here on May 30, had the forehead frontal bone broken by a splinter of shell. His chest and left thigh also were slightly wounded. He received medical treatment at the naval hospital and is now out of danger. Togo Silent and Hidden.

The following brief tactical summary of the battle comes from authoritative sources Admiral Togo had never changed his plan of operations. He had lain in Tsushima Straits, ready for action, for three months. Admiral Rojestvensky had sent scouting boats to the straits, but the Japanese did not reveal their presence, for in a certain harbor they lay completely hidden from view. The Russians feared the forts along the coast of Tsushima Island, and so chose the passage between Iki and Kuisha. Admiral Kamimura's squadron apdolorations and other blemishes. Super-duous hair, moles, warts, etc., eradicat-ed permanently, at the London Derma-few shots. Then Togo's and Kataoka's squadrons appeared to the north of th Russians, who were pressed from the southwest and north toward the east where the Shimonoseki fortress is situated. Rojestvensky, being enveloped, beme an object of concentrated fire from three sides and tried to make a dash toward the Japanese main squadron to the north, but this was hopeless.

Naval experts here regard the following facts in connection with the battle as striking First, the secrecy maintained by the Japanese. Not even the officers of the ships of the other squadons knew the place where Togo's main quadron lay harbored. Secondly, the night bombardment from sunset on May 27 until 2 o'clock on the morning of May 28. Thirdly, the length of the battle. One of the principal Japanese naval officers says in an interview that the reasons why the Russians were so ut-terly annihilated were, first, the deplorable inaccuracy of their shooting, and, secondly, the wretched quality of their o-called explosives. He adds that during the bombardfiring was excessively high, and whenever they hit anything it was only unnels and masts. Hundreds of their shells failed to explode. On the other hand, the Japanese shells were aimed at and-what is more shattered the vital parts of the enemy's ships. The quality of the exosives used by the Japanese was
