THREE REASONS EXPLAINING WHY TY COBB LEADS ALL

Cobb goes from first to third on an infield out. When the ball is hit to third or short, Cobb figures the fielder will take his time to make an accurate throw to first. The first baseman must make the putout and throw fast and accurately to third. By this time Cobb is usually sliding into third. He makes the play seven out of eight times.

Cobb does not stop at first after hitting the ball. He crosses the sack at top speed and turns toward second. He stops midway. If the infielder gets the ball on a bound, Cobb is ready to slide back to first. If the ball Scoring from second on an infield out is another Cobb stunt. It has won games for the Tigers. Cobb figures it requires two, and maybe three, throws to catch him at the plate.

ONE BAD INNING

Eddie Plank of Athletics in Great

with the Athletics. Bill Donovan was the victim, and the inning was again the seventh, when the new pennant winners fell on "the Smiler" for four hits, drew a base on balls, and, aided by two misplays by Charles O'Leary, scored five tallies and cinched a 7-to-1 victory. Outside of this one inning, the game was as interesting a contest as has been was as interesting a contest as has been seen at Bennett Park in some time. Eddie Plank was at his best, and would have come out of the game with a shut-out had it not been for a little spell of wildness on the part of Livingston. "Paddy" was unable to locate the sacks in the second inning, and made two wild throws trying to catch Tigers stealing. Both of these throws enabled the runners to take extra bases, while the first made it possible for Moriarty to score the Tigers' only tally from second base.

Four hits was the total number registered for the Tigers, and not one of these was good for an extra base. Not once did two of these come in the same inning. In six of the nine innings but three Tigers were at bat against Plank, and after the second, when the champs scorting the second of them was earlier to the fourth inning and wan the fourth inning and wanth inning a ed, not one of them was able to pass first base.

Where the Value lies in Dunlop Automobile Tires

All Automobile Tires look very much alike, they can't be judged by their appearance after having gone one or two thousand miles. The Tire you want is the tire that will give the lowest average cost per mile while in use on a car. The tire that will do this is the Dunlop Tire, because, besides the quality there is in the tire itself, you may rely upon the ready willingness of the Dunlop Company to thoroughly satisfy every user of Dunlop Automobile Tires.
