The most important event in Peter McArthur's life was his return to the old homestead in Ekfrid township in the year 1908, when he was 42 years old. From this time on his literary skill was turned to the portrayal of country life, and, after the promising career that had compelled him to live out of Canada for 18 years, he settled again on his farm, glad to identify himself thoroughly with his simple surroundings. In the fall of the same year he began a series of articles describing the activities on his own place. These were published weekly in the Toronto Globe
