Superintendent of Sunday School in Toronto Tells How He Cured Himself of Chronic Rheumatism After Suffer. ing for Years.

55 DOVERCOURT ROAD, Oct., 1st. 1913.

"For a long time, I have thought of writing you regarding what I term a most remarkable cure effected by your remedy "Fruit-a-tives". I suffered from Rheumatism, especially in my hands. I have spent a lot of money without any good results. I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" for 18 months now, and am pleased to tell you that I am cured. All the enlargement has not left my hands and perhaps never will, but the soreness is all gone and I can do any kind of work. I have gained 35 pounds in 18 months".

It Was Worked by Stonewall Jackson, and It Won.

HIS MOST IMPORTANT ORDER

It Was Given by the Cool Headed Con federate Commander to a Confused Federal Soldier, and It Was Prompt ly Obeyed-A Lucky Escape.

Perhaps the most important order that Stonewall Jackson ever issued certainly the most vital to himself is not in the official war records The order was given in person by Jackson to a northern artillery officer as be stood in full uniform ready for battle beside his gun, and, strangest of all was at once executed by him. with the result that the battle was lost by the Federal arms.

Jackson's action on this occasion fur nishes a striking illustration of the value of a cool head and presence of mind in an emergency-on an impor tant occasion when the entirely unex pected happens-at a time when way ering or indecision would result in dis-aster. That he was able instantly to grasp the situation and daringly mas ter it is a tribute to his quickness of judgment and his courage.

It was on a spring morning in 1862. just before the battle of Port Repub lic. Jackson in advance of his troops. with only a single escort, galloped across the bridge over the Shenandoah river into the town, which stood on the east bank. Learning that the army of General Shields was still a good many miles away and confident that his own troops would be in possession long before the enemy, he rode to a residence at the farther end of the vil lage, where he spent nearly an hour.

But meantime the energetic Shieldswhom Jackson declared to be his most formidable opponent-had thrust for ward a small, swift column to occupy Port Republic, seize the bridge and halt Jackson's advance. So rapidly did it move that it gained both objects without firing a shot. More than that. Jackson was a prisoner-if any one had known it!

Jackson, in utter ignorance of the disastrous change, mounted his horse and ambled down the main street to the bridge. What was his astonish ment to see groups of soldiers-in blue:
-busily moving to and fro about the bridgehead and throwing up intrench ments and fortifications. Planted on a little knoll that commanded the bridge and its approaches was a formidable field gun

Fortunately for Jackson, the recent campaigns up and down the valley had faded both blue and gray uniforms into a nondescript drab. As Jackson sat on his horse and watched the busy scene he formed his plan swiftly. He could not go back. He must cross that bridge. That was his only chance. It was the frowning field gun that he feared. He must put it out of commission long enough to get beyond its range. Throwing up his hand to attract attention, he shouted to the of ficer in command of the gun:

"What are you doing with that gun up there? I didn't order it there, and I don't want it there!" There were authority and petulance in his voice as he added, "Limber up and run it over on that knob over there!"

The officer at the gun, thinking that he had to deal with some superior of-ficer recently arrived, hastened to obey without question, explaining in self defense that he had understood his orders

Sitting on Little Sorrel while the Federal troops worked busily about bim, Jackson calmly waited until the gun was lumbering off to its new position. Then he rode quietly across the bridge and up the other bank until be was well out of musket range. Then he turned, waved his hand to the astonished Federals, and, putting spurs to his horse, galloped away from the rain of bullets that pattered barmlessly in the rear.

Had be been captured the Confederate victory at Port Republic which he won a few hours later would not have happened. The able and energetic Shields would have defeated his troops, stunned by his loss.-Youth's Companion.

Palace and Hovel.

Probably in Constantinople, which has been described as the "city of hovels," there is a greater contrast between the public and private buildings than in any other city in the world. The streets are narrow, tortuous and dirty, and even the better class of private houses are mean in comparison with those of a similar class in other countries. On the other hand, the mosques and palaces are magnificent in size, design and materials of construction, most of them being of marble, white or gray. The seraglie is one of the finest buildings in Europe.

DECLINE SUBSTITUTES

Man's Endurance in War From the Indianapolis News.

"I never approach the firing line," writes an English surgeon in a London medical journal, "without a feeling of amazement for the endurance shown by the soldiers.' He pro-ceeds then to tell how the men of all the armies, friend and foe alike, conduct themselves under the almost ceaseless fire. But it is not their courage or their bravery that impresses him so much as the mere fact that the human organism can withstand the shock of encounter with the modern engines of destruction. "In common with others," he confesses, "I believed before the war began that man's ingenuity in inventing deadly weapons had outstripped his ability to stand up and face them, but the soldier of to day encounters these murderous mon sters without sustaining, apparently, any greater shock than his ancestor sustained when he went to war with an enemy armed with bows and arrows.'

It would seem that in spite of the opinion and predictions to the contrary, man cannot make war too horrible for those engaged in it to adjust themselves physically to endure it. To anything short of a force so stupendous as to annihilate armies instantly and completely human nature seems to be equal. The armored Crusader believed, no doubt, that war could not be made more destructive than the war he knew, and men continue to engage in it. The same was thought when gunpowder was first employed. But, step by step, year by year, war's destructive machinery has been rendered more and more deadly, and will be rendered even more deadly. very likely, before this conflict is ended-and still man withstands it. He endures not only a greater hail of missiles, but he endures it for a greater length of time. On the European field of conflict firing has been almost incessant, the battle almost continuous. Perhaps some of its value is upwards of $1,000. the soldiers there may smile grimly when they recall that it was said after Waterloo that soldiers there reached the limit of mortal resistance to the fatigue and exhaustion of battle fury. Waterloo was over in six hours. At Sedan the fighting lasted twice as long. At Gettysburg it continued for three days. From Europe, however, come to-day numerous accounts of men, companies, regiments and brigades that have been under fire without relief-ir constant battle-for three weeks. The significance of it seems to be apparent-man's inventive faculties have not yet succeeded in making war too destructive to be possible. Perhaps it would be well for the world and its tomorrow if this could somehow be accomplished before the guns abroad are silenced. Then, at least, the war would not be with out its recompense.

Making a Target of Him

(From the "London Mirror.")
A wounded Frenchman in hospital at Besancon told this story of a comrade.
"During the engagement in which I was incapacitated another man in my regiment was hit in the leg, and he shouted out to the Germans: "Too low!" Then out to the Germans: "Too low!" Then he bound up his wound and started firing again. A few moments later he was slightly wounded in the hand. "Too high!" he cried, laughingly. But a third ball traversed his shoulder and knocked him down. He lost so much blood that he was obliged to retire. Before he was carried off the field, however, he rose to his feet and shouted angily: he rose to his feet and shouted angrily "You're a condemned pack of cowards! What do you want to always hit the same man for?"

A Big Tree

An immense cedar tree, the superficial contents of which were over 10,000 feet, was brought into Bellinger, on the north coast of Australia, recently, by four bullock teams, which took nine weeks to traverse the forty miles from the head of the Bellinger Valley, where the tree was cut. The tree was so large that the logs had to be sawn in halves lengthwise; and upper valley of the Bellinger abounds in cedar of excellent quality, but con-ditions are so rough that the timber is only obtained with great difficulty.

Remedy For Chapped Hands

One part vinegar and four or five parts water is the best application I have ever tried for chapped hands or skin irritated with cold, and I think I have tried as many remedies as most people. The amount of water should be according to the extends of the vinegar and what the amount of water should be according to the strength of the vinegar and what the patient can stand. The best way is to wash the skin clean and dry with cloth, then apply the prepared vinegar immediately, let dry on or dry with cloth, or just apply without wasking the skin. It will alleviate anyway. If the vinegar is boiled it will not be likely to stain the clothing. It smarts at first.
