tary of state for war in England or the minister of militia in Canada.

With regard to treaties "this sovereign power is vested exclusively in the crown acting under the advice of its responsible ministers", and it is in the power of parliament if it disapproves of a treaty to censure or impeach the ministers who are responsible. Mr. Monk might say that the power of appointing a customs house official is vested in the crown, as indeed every act of government in this country is done in the name of the crown. Mr.

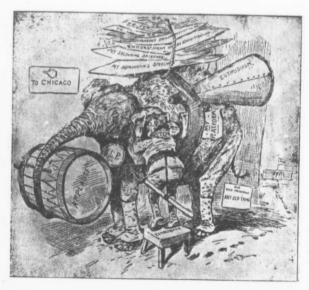

Monk might inquire if there is not a defining act stating that wherever the nanking appears it shall mean the King in Council, just as there is in Canada a sutute stating that, wherever power is given to the Governor-General it shall alway mean the Governor-General it shall alway mean the Governor-General-in-Council takes possible government may not be worth much to Mr. Monk but that boneral jugentleman can rest assured that it is nye garded by the people of Canada as of pricont less value.
