IN PERILS OF ROBBERERS.

The Koords seize the opportunity afforded by the withdrawal of the Turkish troops from their territory, to act out the savage ferocity of their nature. An adventurous band of robbers, under the leadership of a Nestorian Priest and two monks, on a preaching excursion to the plain of Merghawer, in September, will be read with the deepest interest. The beginning of their labors seemed very auspicious. Three villages gladly received them; the last especially, which was widely situated, was eager to hear the word of God. A large congregation which came together in the evening, gave a hearty assent to the truths which were spoken; and the Priest and others sat by Mr. Cochran's bedside till late at night, talking of the worth of the soul and the prize of its redemption. The next day the scene changed. The Nestorians of the villages to which they came had mostly gone to the Bishop's to attend a feast; the Koords were early, and to appearance under the influence of intense bigotry; but as the only course of Mr. Cochran and his companions to pursue was to go forward, they put their trust in the Lord and rode on as rapidly as possible, till within an hour of the Bishop's, when the narrative proceeds, "on descending the bank of a stream by a steep path, five armed men, with their eyes blackened and their mouths muffled, sprung up from behind a thicket, and presented their guns to our heads. We immediately alighted from our horses, and made signs to them to take all that we had. Two of the men commenced beating our Nestorian attendants with heavy walking sticks; and two came to rifle my pockets. One of them cocked his gun, and presented it to my head as a preliminary exorcism. My cloak, and purse containing about six dollars, were given up, as also everything in my pockets save my watch, which I secretly broke from the chain, and threw into the coarse weeds behind me. A few medicines, however, a note book, a pencil and several small articles that were useless to the Koords were returned. My watch chain and key, still remaining on my neck, awakened suspicions that I had a watch and that was demanded with additional flourishes of weapons about my head. They also came to me several times, and demanded more money; but upon exposing my person to their search, they turned away, not taking any of my apparel, save my cloak. Neither were the pockets of the servants searched; nor was their apparel taken, save their lower garments. A couple of men were now placed over us and the horses; and the rest began with eagerness to rifle the loads, introducing the performance, as before, by inflicting several blows on the Nestorians who had the charge of them, and who alone of our number was so unfortunate as to have a dirk.

At the juncture, the robbers were heard to say that they must kill us all, to avoid exposure; an event which we considered as the time quite probable, as we knew it to be a part of their creed that the killing of a Christian was a passport to paradise, and the ribs were accustomed to him with reverence the hand of the murderer of a Nazarene. While the Koords were opening the loads, we had several minutes for silent prayer and for the commitment of ourselves to the hands of our merciful and ever present Saviour. My watch, however, I hid in my pocket, very vividly to mind my imminent danger on the Lake of Oromlah, in company with Dr. Liddell.

After some moments spent by all (I doubt not) in very earnest supplication, I told my men to remain together, and in no event to allow themselves to be separated. I also advised them, in case of an attempt upon our lives, to endeavour to disarm the robbers. Soon however, we heard the Koords disputing among themselves respecting the disposition of us, some still advocating our murder, and others urging that we should be allowed to proceed on our way. In the mean time, as one of the men placed over us had two or three times made signs to me that he would give me my horse, again, I resolved to put his sincerity to the test, and asked permission to mount, which I supposed to be granted; but I had no sooner placed my foot in the stirrup than he drew his dagger, and struck it nearly against my breast. While the attention of the Koords was thus directed towards me, two of our party seized the opportunity to ascend the mountain side several feet on the reach of the robbers. I called to them to return, knowing that it would be impossible for them to escape, if pursued; but they replied, "We shall be taken into the valley and killed, if we return." My impetuosity proved unavailing, and they continued their flight up the mountain side.

This was very trying, as it seemed to me that any attempt to escape would greatly aggravate our condition, and lessen the chances of our final deliverance. But, to my surprise, they were allowed to continue their flight; and, after hesitating a few moments, I resolved gradually to withdraw from the spot, and in the end, if it should appear safe, to put the efficacy of the experiment to the test. I soon found myself a rod or more above them; when I turned and scrambled up the steep acclivity, with all the speed I was capable of. My remaining attendant, the most athletic of all, immediately followed; whereupon two of the ruffians started after us, one of whom mounted my best horse; but he found it impossible to make headway up the steep ascent. The other advanced a short distance, without perceptibly gaining upon us; whereupon he discharged his gun in our direction, and returned. Soon from a high point on the mountain side, we were enabled to look down upon the men engaged in separating the plunder; while our horses, having descended to the banks of the stream below, were quietly feeding. Peering if they returned to the road, they might again encounter the robbers, they made their way along the mountain side as high up as the ruggedness of the summit would permit, often leaving their foothold and slipping down some distance amid rolling stones and sliding earth, and sometimes brought to a stand by gorges whose almost perpendicular sides they must descend and ascend till, about midnight, with bruised limbs and bleeding hands and in extreme exhaustion, but with thankful hearts, they reached the house of the Bishop.

It ought perhaps to excite no surprise to learn that these robbers were sent forward to their deadly work by a chieftain who had angrily forbidden a Nestorian of his district to accompany the party, and who also refused to furnish some of his own men as an escort. The facts are in possession of the British Consul at Mosul.—Journal of Missions.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR.

For nothing do we more admire the services of our Church than for the carefulness displayed that there be no losing sight of the leading doctrines of the faith. It may be said of the clergy of the Church of England, that they are compelled by the Almanac, if not by a sense of the high duties of their callings, to bring successively before their congregations the prominent articles of Christianity. It is not left to their own option, as it comparatively would be if they were not fastened to a ritual, to pass a year without speaking of the Crucifixion, the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ, of the Trinity of persons in the Godhead, or of the outpouring of the Spirit. If they be disposed to keep any of these matters out of their discourses the collector brings the omitted doctrine before the people, and convict the pastor of unfaithfulness. A dissenting congregation may go on for years, and never once be directed to the grand doctrine of the Trinity in Unity. They are dependent on their minister. He may advance what he chooses; he may select his own lessons, as well as his text. An Episcopal congregation is not thus dependent on their minister. He may be a Unitarian in his heart; but he must be so far a Trinitarian to his people as to declare from the desk, even if he keeps silence in the pulpit, that the Catholic faith is this, that we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity. And thus, whatever the objections which may be urged against forms of prayer, we cannot but think that a country without a liturgy is a country which lies open to all incursions of heresy. We obey, then, with thankfulness, the appointment of our Church which turns our thoughts especially, to particular doctrines; not at any vision excluding their discussion; but providing that at least once a year each should occupy a prominent place.

THE REV. H. MELVILLE.

BE TRUE WITH CHILDREN.

On one occasion, when leaving the house I had promised to bring to my little boy a bun; but some time elapsed during my absence, and I returned home, having entirely forgotten it. However, upon entering the nursery, I was specially reminded of it, by his anxiety to claim my promise, which was obliged to tell him I had forgotten. He had been watching some hours for my return; and a burst of tears would have been very pardonable. I rather expected it; but not a single expression of disappointment escaped him. The earnest, porphyrine glow which first shone upon me I never encountered before, and such was my foot almost ashamed of what I plainly saw was a falsehood in his eyes. It was but transient; for after I had assured him that I had indeed meant what I had said, and explained the import of the word forgotten, which was so incomprehensible to him, he was quite satisfied. I set off to repair my forgetfulness, and again he took his station at the window to watch me. When he had obtained his bun, the thought of my promise was still, evidently, prominent in his mind, and in his own simple way, he silenced any momentary doubt which might have arisen in his mind, as to my truthfulness, reportedly saying, "Mamma only forgot."

"I DID AS THE REST DID."

This tame, yielding spirit—this doing as the rest did, "has ruined thousands. A young man is invited by vicious companions to visit the theatre, or the gaming room, or other haunts of licentiousness. He becomes dissipated—spends his time—loses his credit—squanders his property, and at last sinks into an untimely grave. What ruined him? Simply "doing as the rest did."

A father has a family of sons. He is wealthy. Other children in the same situation of life do so and so—are so indulged in this and that. He indulges his own in the same way. They grow up idlers—triflers—and fops. The father wonders why his children do not succeed better. He has spent much money on their education—has given them great advantages. But alas, they are only a source of vexation and trouble. Poor man, he is just paying the penalty of "doing as the rest did."

The sinner followed the example of others, puts off repentance—and neglects to prepare for death. He passes along through life, till, unawares, death strikes the fatal blow. He has no time left now to prepare. And he goes down to destruction, because he was so foolish as to "do as the rest did."—Christian Witness.

UNION OF THE PROVINCES.

It will be seen from the following that the Rt. John (N. B.) Cowler looks very coolly on a Federal Union of the Provinces. A Union of the Colonies.—We see this subject has been taken up in Nova Scotia, and that the great leaders there unite in expressing themselves favorable to it, it is probable that the question will before long be forced on our attention. As at present advised, we feel bound to say that we can see no good in the project. A legislative union is out of the question. It could never extend to have our interests swamped by those of Canada, and we have no wish to have a close political connexion with our viceroyal sister, Nova Scotia. A Federal Union, that is, a Union similar to that of the United States, leaving to each Province its Local Government, in what we presume is meant, as to the Colonies, we cannot imagine what the General Government would find to do. We have no relations with other states. We have no notion of being taxed to support an army and navy, and each province has its own ideas and interests as to a tariff, and the disposal of the revenue. We would like to see the idea of a union worked out of its results in a practical common sense way. At present, we do not understand it.

We believe the time yet far distant for a separation between the Province and the Colonies. We have not one quarter of the population necessary for an independent confederacy, and if we leave the wing of "our mother" too soon, it will only fall an easy prey to the neighbouring eagle. Mr. Newgate inquired recently in the British House of Commons, whether there was any law in Canada, or in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, under which subjects could be imprisoned for not taking the oath of the Host, as borne by Roman Catholics, upon the public highway. He based his enquiry upon the conviction of Narcissus Filan de Beauport, near Quebec, on the 9th of June last. The circumstances of the arrest and conviction were narrated by Mr. Newgate with tolerable accuracy. The Under Secretary of the Colonies, Mr. Peel, stated that he knew of no law that would compel a man to take off his hat upon the highway upon the occasion of such processions; but he added that there was a provincial statute which provided for the punishment of persons who interrupted public works, and that he intended to introduce a bill to amend the Act, so that the Government promising to inquire into it.—Colonist.

MADONNAE AYLIN.—The first annual meeting of the friends of the Magdalen Asylum was held in the Mechanics' Hall, in this city, on the 22nd instant, Judge Arnold, Esq., in the chair. The Rev. Mr. Sanson read the report, from which it appears that the Institution has done a vast amount of good, being a means of saving a large number of women from a hopeless fate. The Committee of Ladies received deserved praise for their zeal in procuring funds. The building at present occupied is considered too small to accommodate the number seeking admittance, and it is therefore recommended to have a new one, for the site of a gift of a site will be obtained. The estimated cost of the new building is about £1,500, which sum there can be little difficulty in raising. Committees of ladies and gentlemen are to be formed to make the collection, and we trust they will be successful. The sum received in respect of the new one, for the site of a gift of a site will be obtained.
