Certified ALEXANDER MARLING, Education Office, Toronto, January, 1868. IV. Lapers on Meteorology, &c. 1. THE SUN'S ATMOSPHERE.

In a lecture on spectrum analysis, delivered before the Royal Institution of Great Britain, Dr. W. A. Miller said:—

"The phenomenon to which I am going to direct your attention is only visible on those rare occasions when the disc of the sun is obscured by the passage of the moon between us and its body. In those cases and under suitable conditions, we have an opportunity of ascertaining that the sun is surrounded by a vast atmosphere, which is not in that intensely glowing and incandescent condition which the surface that we usually see is. I have here a photograph which represents an observation made by Dr. De La Rue in July, 1860. This indicates the appearance which is seen when the whole disc of the sun, which is visible under ordinary circumstances, is entirely eclipsed by the moon. You will notice that round the dark body of the moon we have a remarkable halo of light, and that this halo is at certain points much more brilliant than at others,— that in point of fact, there are points thrown up in the atmosphere.
"Some of these clouds have been seen detached from each other.

It is estimated that the height at which these clouds occur is in some cases at least 72,000 miles from the surface of the sun, so that around the sun there is a vast atmosphere invisible under ordinary circumstances, into which visible atmosphere are projected what you see here, and what have been called red flames, clouds probably of in-candescent matter. In this photograph the solar atmosphere is all of one uniform tint, but as actually seen, its projections, instead of being white, are of a rich red color, and possesses considerable photographic power. Thus, if the atmosphere is favorable, opportunity will be given to persons properly prepared for making observations upon these flames by means of the spectroscope, and thus, probably, of ascertaining what the constituents are."
