Cooalts displayed considerable irregularity on the local mining exchange to-day, the market showing undoubted strongth at certain intervals, but developing a reactionary tone which carried prices back around their former levels, when the buying demand was satisfied and liquidation came into

Trading, except in special instances, was exceedingly dull, dealings in the majority of shares veing very small. In the specialties, however, there was a responsible undertone in evidence, an here transactions were much more rative active. Timiskaming was the feature of the market, these shares being picked up on the announcement of the dividend and bonus declaration. The stock sold as high as par in the early dealings-but there seemed to be plenty on offer around that figure, and the quotations quickly dropped back again, closing at around 96, or two points above last week's figures. There was a disposition to sell Tre-theowey on the announcement that the directors would ask the shareholders to ratify a bylaw to increase the capi-tal to $2,000,000. Under this selling the price dropped to 120, a loss of seven points from the high figure of last Saturday. There was little doing in the cheaper

Saturday. There was little doing in the cheaper issues. Beaver, and Peterson Lake both dropped a fraction, and Right of Way and Great Northern made small advances, the latter on the news that the company had sold out their inter-est in the Cobalt Electric Light plant for something like $250,000, of which $75,000 was stated to be in cash. WETTLAUFER

The prices for most of the non-dividend Cobalt shares are still easy, the stocks making returns to shareholders are decidedly firm. In the latter there is less speculation, and this accounts in a large measure for their steadiness. The list of dividend Cobalts will increase, and we regard many of the low priced stocks as particularly cheap on that account. The market now is safer buy than we have seen it for many months, and excellent opportunities are offered to investors. Buying or selling orders will receive our promp attention.
