"The example of Australia was a case in point. The Hindoos had practically ceased to come to Canada. These people now number some 2500. Many more Japanese were expected, however. There was no truth in the report that the C.P.R. was bringing in the Japanese. The anti-Asiatic campaign was opposed by a comparatively small minority of their people, and a great proportion of the employers went on their side."

An Ottawa despatch says: "There has so far been no communication with the Canadian authorities regarding the Hindoos, which the people of Bellingham, Wash., are reported to have driven out."
