WAS HE SERIOUS?

Manager Carr Thinks Ald. Carrothers Was Not-Street Railway

Notes. Manager Carr claims that the change in the street railway service advocated by Ald. Carrothers at the city council would be quite impracticable. It would be impossible, he says, to run the cars both ways on the South London, Central avenue and Rectory street belt in the asylum on Sunday morning. lines, as suggested, without reconstructing a great deal of the system. The motion could hardly have been seriously considered, he thinks. Only two weeks ago the council, through the engineer, approved the company's ser-

Extra cars had been put on to oblige the council, and the result had not been an increase of business, he said. He held that the bylaw afforded the company some protection. The objection to the cars running backwards on Rectory street will soon be obviated. The switch makers were here on Saturday, and plans for putting a switch at the corner of Dundas and Rectory streets are under way. Work on the South Wellington street "Y" will be completed in a day or two. One of the frogs, which was unsuitable, had to be replaced, and a new one has

Why that procedure should be more destructive of legislative dignity than sitting in the house with one's hat on, or writing letters while a member is speaking, we cannot say. But Mr. Thomas Beattie, the gallant but fastidious member for London, saw differently, and accordingly engaged the house yesterday with a description of the desecration caused by the unsanctified use of refreshments at the desks of honorable members. Mr. Beattie seemed specially horrified that among the refreshments was "a bottle of Carling's beer." At this specific bottle he thundered with an eloquence that would have knocked Demosthenes senseless in the first round. But we really never expected to live to see a member for London call the point of order on London's celebrated brand of Carling's ale, If Mr. Beattie keeps right on, some fine morning he will awake, like Lord Byron, to find himself famous.

Worship of Living Beings. The Extent to Which Many Savage Nations Carryon This

Form of Idolatry. A London correspondent writes: Referring to the account of the deification of Bismarck in Brazil, for canonization is scarcely the right word to use in this case, it may interest your readers to know that the great Gen. Nicholson, who pacified the district of Oude after the Indian mutiny, was deified by some The problem for Mr. Sanders to solve of the natives, who formed themselves is what disposition to make of the little into a sect, "The Worshipers of Nikkal Sew." Again, at Prissa, also in Hindustan, even now there is a temple which conall county children taken over by the tains the statue of our Empress-Children's Ald Society, whose officers Queen, which the natives adore as a goddess. This custom of worshiping human beings is one of hoary antiquity. According to some authorities the Pharaohs of Egypt, the Incas of Peru, Emperors of Mexico, and the Kings of Assyria, Babylon and Persia were regarded as gods while still alive. So I was Attila by his Huns, though probably this reverence diminished after his crushing defeat at the battle of Chalons. All the Emperors of Rome, be ginning from Augustus Caesar and ending when Constantine embraced Christianity, were worshiped in their own lifetime, temples and statues to each being erected and priests appointed to serve them. And really, when one considers how ignorant the majority of men must be, owing to the force of circumstances, it certainly seems much more reasonable for them to worship a living power incarnate in so tremendous a being, as, say, Trajan was, whose works they saw and whose majesty they knew, than to fall down before images to whose power only legend attested. The reasonableness of this view is shown by the fact that when Marcus Aurelius, the wisest and best of all the Roman Emperors, tried to suppress the worship of himself, he had even less success than Gen. Nicholson. Nearly all primitive tribes look on their kings as living gods, and many go to the extreme of putting them to death if great national misfortunes come too thickly; even two or three years of drought would be enough with some savage tribes. There is the wellauthenticated case of the island called Savage Island, in the South Pacific, where the kingly office has lapsed completely, because none could be found rash enough to assume the dangerous

This savage belief is generally held by ethnologists to account for the objection the Ashantis have to their king crossing a certain river ten miles from Kurnasi, for they consider their fetish's presence necessary in the capital. Their rumored intention, mentioned lately in the newspapers, to kill Prempeh if he crossed this river would probably have been carried into effect if Sir Francis Scott had not taken the precautions he

The reason of the apparent inconsistency of the savage who worships a man as a god, and yet considers it the thing to kill him if his reign proves disastrous, seems to be this: That the king is the living tabernacle of the tribal fetish; this fetish is all-powerful; hence if misfortune comes it shows that he is displeased with the body provided for way to let the fetish out. Then a successor is chosen, and the fetish enters into him, and everybody waits and hopes, especially the poor king. It is probably to this primeval idea that the symptoms: Moisture, intense itch- ty, still prevalent in many countries, habits of exaggerated respect to royaling and stinging, mostly at night; even in Europe, may be traced. India during the seventh century before Christ. The power of the Dalaslama is as unquestioned in Thibet as his divinity: nobody comes near him save on bended knees, not even the Tartar princes from Central Asia, who occasionally make a pilgrimage to the capital of Thibet. Directly one Dalailama dies another is ready to take his place, of course a new-born child, as the theory is that the Buddha enters a fresh human body immediately after the old one is dead.
