and tends by its example, to elevate and reform. Neither an intelligent individual, nor a well informed industrious community, are prone to mingle in the vices and tumults of the day. Hence, the more intelligence we infuse into labour, the more abundant will be its products—the more honorable its calling, the more numerous its subjects, and the sounder the condition of public morals. Knowledge and industry combined, if not synonymous with virtue, are at least a pretty good indication of worth and usefulness. We would press upon the consideration of every farmer the importance of agricultural publications, as the cheapest and most certain means of improving in the practice and profits of his business. These bring to his notice constantly the improvements and discoveries that are going on in the business of agriculture, and they detail the practice of the best farmers.
