Blood Samples Tested for the Effects of High Altitudes—Secure Valuable Facts.

(Toronto Globe)
Professors in the department of physiology of the University of Toronto are actively co-operating with the expedition of scientific men which started recently for Peru to study the effect of air pressure at high altitudes on human life.
Some of the samples of blood taken from the veins of the members of the expedition will be sent to the University of Toronto for analysis. The results of these analyses will form the data upon which the valuable findings of the expedition will be based.
Toronto Man There.
The party is composed of Prof. Joseph Barcroft, of the University of Cambridge; Prof. Mackenzie, a graduate of McGill University, and at the present time professor of physiology at the University of Edinburgh, along with several others from England, where the expedition had its origin.

its origin at Cambridge, and a group from the United States composed of Prof. Redfield, formerly on the staff of the University of Toronto; Dr. Harrop of Johns Hopkins University; Dr. Binger of the Rockefeller Institute; and others from American medical schools.
This expedition is to arrive in Peru early in December, and, having studied the behavior of the blood gases, respiration and other functions at sea level, will travel by the Central Railroad to Peru to its highest point, Ticio, which is 16,000 feet above sea level. At this height all the members of the expedition will probably suffer from symptoms of mountain sickness. While in this condition they will again examine the behavior of the blood gases, respiration, etc., comparing the results with those obtained a few days before at sea level. In a few days they will recover from the symptoms of mountain sickness.
Test Mines' Powers.
The main object of their investigations is to find out whether this recovery has depended on blood, blood gases, respiration, or other functions. At the same time they will make observations on the workmen in the various mines in the neighborhood of Ticio, for it is at present an inexplicable fact that newcomers become excessively fatigued even on the slightest exertion. It is hoped that it may be possible to discover the nature of the composition which effects this difference.
The practical application of the results obtained is partly in order that the problem of living at high altitudes may be understood, thus making possible the prevention of accidents from aeroplaning, balloon ascents, and mountaineering, and partly so that knowledge may be gained which will help in the treatment of clinical conditions like pneumonia, gas poisoning, etc., where oxygen deficiency is the real cause for the condition.
Are Thoroughly Equipped.
The expedition is probably more thoroughly equipped for these blood investigations than any previous one, and is made up of men specially qualified in the various lines they will be working in. The party will remain in Peru for two months, during which time a freight car fitted up as a laboratory will be placed at their disposal by the railway authorities.
The Village Cut-ups.
At a small town on the Wabigoon, in Missouri, they are using an old passenger coach, built 23 B. C., as a station. "Where's your depot?" I asked the agent.
"We used to have one," he replied, "but the boys whittled it."
