Just a word about the high cost of living.

All the politicians and the newspapers are talking about the high cost of living. Housekeepers are not only talking about it, but are feeling it. Now, as far as meats go, we can be of service to you. There has grown a very decided demand for certain cuts—result, prices have to go up, for the demand exceeds the supply. This means that many another cut, for all purposes just about as good, is not in such demand; those who buy these cuts are getting splendid value. Drop in and see us next time when we are down and let us talk over the meat question. We can help you.

CHAPTER IX.—(Continued.)

"Sometimes men," Mary answered.

"Morgan has a set of Gothic tapestries worth half a million dollars."

"About a month ago the things I was telling you of were hung in the library of a millionaire in this city. He had a chair a little closer to the desk and leaned forward, lowering his voice almost to a whisper as he stated his plan.

"Let's go after them. They were smuggled, mind you, and no matter what happens he can't equal. What do you say?"

Garson shot a piercing glance at Mary.

"Oh, I know all that, of course," Griggs returned impatiently. "But if you can—"

"My friends and I never do anything that's illegal. Thank you for coming to us, Mr. Griggs, but we can't go in, and there's an end of the matter."

"But wait a minute," English Edie interrupted. "You see, this chap Griggs is—"

"Gilder?" Mary exclaimed questioningly.

"Yes. You know who he is—the dry goods man."

Mary, however, had regained her self-control, and her voice was tranquil again as she replied:

"I know; but just the same, it's illegal, and I won't touch it. That's all there is to it."

"But half a million!" Griggs exclaimed disconsolately. "There's a stake in it."

"English Edie" Griggs.

"You're right, think of it! He turned pleadingly to Garson. 'Half a million, Joe!'"

The telephone rang, and Mary excused herself. The instant she was out of the room Griggs turned to Garson anxiously.

"It's a cinch, Joe," he pleaded. "I've got a plan of the house. He drew a paper from his breast pocket and handed it to the forger, who studied it with intent, availing eyes."

"It looks easy," Garson agreed. "It's easy. What do you say?"

"I promised Mary never to—"

"But a chance like this! Anybody would come down to the back room at Bington's."

THE IDEAL

Have we not all, amid life's petty strife, Some pleasant, happy, happy life? The future is a blank, the past is dead, And just within our reach! It was and yet We lost it in this daily life and tread And now live idle in a vain regret. But still our place is kept, and it will wait, Ready for us to fill it soon or late.

No star is ever lost we once have seen We always may be what we might have been. Shown to us, though only thought had life and soul, God's life—our life—be redeemed from death. And evil in its nature is decay. And any hour may come it all away. And hopes that but a dream, the dreamer seem May be the truer life, and end the dream.

key's tonight and we have a shift. Will you?"

"Make it early, say 'I'."

"I'll come," Garson replied half guiltily. And in the same moment Mary re-entered.

Griggs rose and spoke with an air of regret.

"It's 'follow the leader,'" he said, "and show you are against it that settles it."

CHAPTER X.

Garson's Nameless Gun.

SOMETHING of what was in his mind was revealed in his first speech after Griggs' going.

"That's a mighty big stake he's playing for."

"And a big chance he's taking!" Mary retorted. "No, Joe, we don't want any of that. We'll play a game that's safe and sure."

Griggs rose and spoke with an air of regret.

"It's 'follow the leader,'" he said, "and show you are against it that settles it."

"What do you mean?"

Garson walked to and fro nervously as he answered.

"Suppose the bulls get tired of you."

"Oh, in that case, the meaning of 'this pot' is explained. Well, it is explained, but I don't see how it can be a good idea for all of us to examine the pot. The one we use the most, and see if it is full of blue or gold color."

It is blue—well, empty it out and wipe out all the cobwebs; air it up and then pour in the bright gold. The pot is full to the light and with the sunbeams radiating from it. Then a glance up at the clear blue sky, and you seem to hear that 'God is in His Heaven, and all is right with the world.'"

Suppose the bulls get tired of you. The gold pot is to be found. Well, suppose again that you begin by looking up or going to bed or doing something for some one who is worse off than yourself. And then—perhaps right on her doorstep you will find the box of gold dust, with the motto, 'Be thankful, you never had what most of your neighbors have to put up with.'"

"Thrill among the rich" is the title of one of Isaac Maroon's vivid articles in the "Saturday Evening Post." Among many things worth remembering, the writer says that "strange as it may seem to the average person, whose idea of wealth is the tiny sum snatched by the worker from his weekly wage, the habit of small saving finds constant and picturesque expression among the rich."

MAN'S LETTER

A Society girl bewails the number of pessimists floating around.

We realize our blessings when we match them against our neighbor's hard luck.

Why are the rich so thrifty?

A good play this week and fine acting.

The week in Society was quieter than usual.

All the Society happenings in January.

"What an awful lot of people have caught the 'blue pot' habit and are selling the contents of their pockets! Haven't you noticed it?" she asked, raising her blue eyes enquiringly to meet mine.

"For goodness sake, what do you mean?" I asked, looking at her as if you had been literally dipped in some dark ink-blue solution.

"You know the habit," she continued. "Pessimism is catching everywhere. People who are rich are selling the contents of their pockets! Haven't you noticed it?" she asked, raising her blue eyes enquiringly to meet mine.

"For goodness sake, what do you mean?" I asked, looking at her as
