

You profit by my example and overwork. Truly, I think you are doing far too much and you will go on just as I have and find someday to your horror that the rest you have been promising yourself will not come at your wedding. Write up some of the many things you have undertaken.
I wish I could have heard you speak at Albert Hall. Would you send me a paper containing your remarks. I know well what Apparently out of everything so far as the world can see. I have been making some headway on Sir Wilfred's life but I find it slow work, and in some respects not the complete change that I think is most needed. It keeps hourly before me the sensation and feelings that are inseparable from the spiritual struggle, and just now there seem to highlight the consciousness of being out of it. The realization of defeat and its consequences has
