Secular and Religious Papers

R. R. THOMPSON.

It was the wise man Solomon who said, "of raking many books there is no end," and the ame truth is applicable to the publication of apers. This is an age of newspapers and of newspaper reading. The only literature which many tive attention to is that found in the columns of daily or weekly journal. It is better that they hould read this than not read at all. Very often hristian people are discovered perusing the pages I a newspaper each day at a greater length of me than they spend searching the Scriptures. he newspeper occupies an important place in he affairs of life. It is almost indispensable. O doubt there are times when we would be better front to know the news which it furnishes us. In one should be careful of the quality of papers hich he reads, for there is a moral character bout a newspaper which will either benefit or jure those with whom it comes in contact. here is no way by which one can keep abreast I the times, know current events so well, as rough the medium of the new spaper. In a few oments we may know the history of the world hich has been made the previous day. Newspapers are moulders of public opinion. Upon any subjects, especially of a political nature, cople act according to the thinking of the newspaper editor rather than their own. The minister, o matter how busy he may be, should take time or mater how busy he may be, should take time or ead a daily newspaper if available. They hould, like all others, do so judiciously.

But in these modern days there has arisen a ind of journalism known as the religious papers

But in these modern days there has arisen a ind of journalism known as the religious papers which, though giving space to temporal matters, eals more with those facts pertaining to Chrisanity, its influence and progress in the world, his kind of journalism is on equality with the cular papers as to importance. It is an essent-lactor in Christ's kingdom, ading the Christian in growth of character and knowledge, and he church to do its work. If we view the religious paper aright it is both evangelical and sanctifying in its effect. The power of the press to good is herein demonstrated. The religious per meets not only a Christian need, but a mominational one, so that there is no denominatom without one or more papers published in the iterest of disseminating its particular belief in irristian doctrines. Besides these there are any non-sectarian papers issued, and which ad a large circulation.

While there is an abundar ce of religious papers ing forth each week from our printing presses a surprising and sad how large a number of ristian homes are without one of these papers. In may enter them and find plenty of reading ter from secular papers, but not one line may read from a religious journal. Should any them why they do not take the paper the swer will be, 'I cannot afford it.'' And yet ers are coming into their homes costing from to three times as much as a religious paper alld. Again, many of these persons will say ye can find no interest in reading a religious per, and yet they are professing Christians. It quite probable that many church members do take a religious 1 aper because they have been educated as to its value. Here is are, perhaps, the pulpit has failed to do a ck. A sermon on the worth of religions papers hi not only increase such a paper's subscripilist, but would result in a blessing to a church, istian people should know about the progress Christ's kingdom beyond their cwn bounds, y shoulde be informed of the movements of reheaved they have these things without the help religious paper.

Christians can take only one religious paper hould be one of their own denomination. cellent, indeed, are some of our undenominonal journals, but these should not win us rely away from subscribing for our own definational paper. These papers have a mission.

Baptist journals are to make better Baptists and better Eaptist churches. They have a right to live; they should have our support that they might do so.

might do so.

The fault which many Christian people find with religious papers is due to themselves. We, to a certain extent, make our denominational papers what they are. Religious papers cannot be run without money. The more money a paper has the better paper it can publish. The ditor realizes this, but what he wants is the people to feel it and express their feelings by subscribing for the paper. The editor of one of the largest religious papers in this country stated not long ago to a large audience: "The cry is give us a cheaper paper. There is only one way, my friends, that we can do this, and that is give us a larger subscription list." Is not this what every editor says as he hears the cry ringing in his ears as he sits in the sanctum? "Your paper costs too much, give us a cheaper one."

Would that, as Christians, we might feel the need and worth of a religious paper in cur Lomes, and especially one published by our own denomination. They are not mere money concerns, but have a God-given work to perform. They are here to help us, to enlighten us in the Holy Word, to give us knowledge of the Spirit's work now in the world. We should appreciate their labors and do all we can to sustain them.

We fully indorse the above article. We fully indorse the above article. But there are other reasons why many Christian homes are without a reigious, or a denominational paper, than are stated in Bro. Thompson's complaints. Whether his remedy for bettering the character and contents of our religious papers would remove all objections from the minds of Christian families or not is port outles so, clear. For many move an objections from the minds of Christian families or not is not quite so clear. For many of our religious, and denominational papers that have a large and wide circulation still retain some very offen sive and objectionable matter that honest and pious people cislike to see in religious periodicals. We refer to the bulletins of political partisanship in which some religious papers indulge. All religious denominations are divided on politics; and nothing of a partisan nature can be politics; and nothing of a partisan nature can be said in a paper without offending either one section or the other. All political discussion should be relegated to the secular press. Another objectionable and effensive, yea, and abominable lot of statements feund in most of the religious papers of today are the patent medicine advertisments, and testimonials. They are more the edge describes written by expects at are mostly false, deceptive, written by experts at the business, who make a living by preparing them for the manufacturers and the The parties interested in the sale of these pre-parations prefer the columns of a religious paper parations freter the columns of a religious paper for advertising their money making frauds be-cause people generally suppose that a religious paper states nothing but what is true, and there-fore are more easily victimized. The sewer press of today is largely supported by the patronage of patent med cine manufacturers; and it is a burning shame for the religious press to have a hand in the nefarious business. Many people are in the netarious business. Many people are being disgusted with the entraping way they are being decoyed into reading many of these design-ing statements. We unhesitatingly affirm, that there is no greater imposition perpetrated upon mankind today than the patent medicine business. The sick and the afflicted are made to believe by these manufactured testimonies that there are these manufactured testimon.es that there are sure remedies in these potions, and are there-by induced to try them, when they reed the money spend for them for other necessaries of life. And in nine cases out of ten they receive more injury than benefit by the use of them. We hope the day is not far distant when the religious press will cleanse itself of this pollution. As we said in our prospectus of this paper, there are two things that shall never stain nor pollute the pages, viz: politics, and patent medicines; which already has given popularity to tile paper. We are receiving many commendations for the non-appearance of these lying advertisements. Therefore, brethren and sisters, if you want a clean sheeted paper to visit your homes, send us your subscription for the HOME MISSION JOURNAL."

The Christian Life.

Joseph A. Bennett.

The Christian life as taught by the Christ is not fragmentary but full ordered. It is not a single ray of the spectrum, but all the rays harmoniously blended, producing the white light of a pure and perfect character. It is not a single battle, fought and won, but a long and arduous campaign; and warfare in which there is and can be no discharge warrare in which there is and can be discording until the last battle is fought and the victorious troops march to the city of 'God. It is not a single note or monotone, but a grand and glorious anthem, in which all the notes blend and merge, authem, in which all the notes blend and merge, whisper and thunder. The great need of the church and the world to-day is more Christians, like the light, bright and luminous; like an army contending and victorious; and like the authem, sweet and harmonious. The great temptation of a Christian is to live a fragmentary life that is: a Christian is to live a fragmentary life that is:
Do one duty and leave others undone; obey one command and forget or slight others; serve God and man one hour or day during the week, and give the rest of the time to the service of the world and self. But if we will fully trust God and measure up to the standard which is set for us then we shall not be single-rayed Christians, flashing but one virtue, but we shall gather all the rays from the sun of righteousness, and shine with a light that shall in truth be a revelation. The sunlight-what is it, but a revelation? see not the light, but the things on which it shines. Even so the perfect life reveals not itself, but the things of God. "And His life was the light of men," can be said of every Christian, in propor-tion as they reflect their Lord. If we thus lived this perfect life, what an army we would be, going forth to fight with blades of flashing light, dispelling the darkness of sin and kissing into bloom the fruits and flowers of a spiritual life. bloom the fruits and nowers of a spiritual ine-And more, as we march to the fray, it would be with songs, glad ard joyous. There is more music in a real Christian life than the world has ever dreamed of. Have you heard the great organ in the cathedral peal out its notes, making the lofty arches ring with its harmonies? Did the lofty arches ring with its harmonies? Did you hear the mighty chorus roll forth its waves of harmony? And did you say it was grand. Ah. I can tell you of grander music than ever came from organ or chorus, grand as they may be. If you had ears sufficiently attuned to catch the strain, you might hear coming from the heart that forgives an injury received, sweeter music than ever came from angel harps. To forgive a wrong; to pray for those who despitefully use you; to patiently suffer and silently bear insult and injury, is to strike in the human breast a keyboard whose notes will reach highest heaven and make the song of the angels but a minor strain. It is hard to understand this? It will not be, if for a little while you stand before the cross of for a little while you stand before the cross of Calvary; you need not gaze upon the awful scene; I would rather you would close your eyes just now, and listen, while the heart of God's Son is smitten. Do you hear the ring? It is the ring of self-denial. It is the ring of a heart that loves unto death even his enemies. Ah, my Christian friends, there is your pitch; hear the ring of suffering love; it is to be the key-note of your life. When your spiritual tone runs low, listen at the cross for the ring of the Master's heart. So shall you be full orbed Christians, scattering sunshine, winning victories and filling the world with heavenly harmonies. with heavenly harmonies.
