

The Young Housewife

is anxious to get good results from her first efforts in baking. She is eager for the admiring comments of her husband and her visitors. She knows that her bread and pastry will be subjected to close criticism, and realizes that in her nervous anxiety she is likely to make mistakes, by using too much of this or too little of that. Then again, the flour she uses is apt to vary in quality from time to time, unless she uses which takes a heavy burden of responsibility off the young wife's shoulders. It is a scrupulously exact blend of Manitoba Spring wheat and Ontario Fall wheat, so balanced as to provide an unvarying uniformity of superlative quality.

"Beaver" Flour

"BEAVER FLOUR" contains all the gluten—the bone and muscle forming element—of the Manitoba wheat and the qualities of the Ontario wheat that make bread light and white, and cakes and pastry tasty and flaky.

"BEAVER FLOUR" saves the trouble of keeping one flour for bread and another for pastry. It is a bread flour and a pastry flour too. It is reliable at all times and under all conditions. It is also economical, for it makes more loaves to the barrel than any other flour—loaves that are as good to look upon as they are tasty and nutritious. For biscuits, pies and pastry, "BEAVER FLOUR" has no equal. Don't take our word for it. Try it, and be convinced.

Your grocer has it, and will be proud to recommend it.

CHAPTER VII.

A VISIT AND A QUARREL.

Come away! Break through all delays! Woman is a fickle and changeable thing. —Virgil.
To willful men The injuries that they themselves procure Must be their schoolmasters. —Shakespeare.

At the same hour Mr. Madison and his daughter Bessie were taking breakfast together. Mr. Madison had delayed this meal much beyond his usual hour in order to give himself the pleasure of Bessie's society; for she had just returned from her European trip, and her presence was very charming to him. Also he had wished to secure her sympathy in his own plans before she had time to make others which would interfere with them.

It was Bessie a little more sun-browned, a little more womanly, a little more self-reliant and self-appreciative, that came into the room, with her head well up and her pretty form the centre of a wonderful combination of floating pale-pink cashmere and silk lace rosettes of ribbon. "Is it not pretty?" she asked, as her father kissed and then held her at arms' length to admire. "I expect Cousin Amber this morning, and you know how aristocratic brides always are, father. But in this gown I shall feel equal to Mrs. Dr. Carter."

"You look—stunning! I know no other word, Bessie."
"That word will do, father." And she seated herself carefully, letting her drapery fall into its proper curves and folds, and slightly drawing upward the sleeves in order to shield their elaborate lace trimmings. "Yes, I wrote to Amber yesterday. I told her I had a cold and a troublesome cough, and you see how badly I am sunburnt. It will take at least four days' attention to make my face presentable. So I wrote to Amber, I want to see how she looks and acts. Marriage always changes people so much. But she will not put on marriage graces with me, I think. I shall only laugh at them."
"I hope you will not quarrel."
"Human nature is fallible; but, as a rule, girls do not eat girls."
"We are all fallible."
"Except the New York Herald." I like the Herald just because it is so sure of its own infallibility—so sure it knows everybody and everything. I intend to cultivate the same conviction. It must be lovely to feel positive that one is always right and must be always right, and that everyone who doubts our always being right is either a very silly or a very disreputable person."

Mr. Madison fluttered his Herald and laughed. He could not help regarding his little girl with an intense amusement and enjoyment. She was so imposing in her fineries, she seemed to be everybody in the room, to demand so much attention, to fill up so much mental space, that he said: "You are so light and sweet and so apparently important, Bessie, that you remind me of nothing so much as whipped cream. There is not really a great deal of you and yet, somehow, you fill the room. I feel as if I were nobody at all."
"That is because you are dressed in a yard or two of gray tweed. If you had velvet breeches on and a plush coat, lined with satin and laces at your fingers and diamonds on your toes, you would feel very imposing."
"I should feel like a fool or a flunkey."
"But is not whipped cream nice? A great many persons prefer it to roast-beef. And though it does take up a deal of room it has its individuality. If you were to compress it in any way, then it would cease to be whipped cream. Would you like me reduced to an essence, father? Essence of Bessie Madison?"
"No, no, Bessie! I like you just as you are."
"I like you, too, just as you are—with the prospect of the changes you will be sure to make this winter. For you will have to go out with me, and we shall entertain at home; and as you will be expected to dance and take ladies in to supper and that kind of thing, you will require dress-suits. How handsome you will look! I was thinking you might refreshen the drawing rooms and the large dining-room and the small reception room and a guest-chamber or two. I heard yesterday that Doctor Carter has made his house a perfect paradise."
"Paradise!"
"Not a Bible one, of course; a kind of Turkish one, represented by gorgeous carpets and curtains and all kinds of luxuries. I have to try and fancy Ambrosia in the midst of this splendor. Madame Savary was here yesterday, and she says Mr. Will Carter stayed in New York all summer directing a small army of Italian decorators."

"Pshaw! I do not credit more than a hundredth part of such stories. Are you intending to rival your cousin's house and address?"
"Rival! You should not have such plain words, father. I have always had finer rooms than Cousin Amber, and it is not in the nature of an American girl to fall behind, even in carpets and curtain goods. Now is it? But 'rivalry' is an ugly word; and commits you to so many unpleasant things."
"Besides, you are younger than Ambrosia."
"Which thing is in my favor; every day is a gain in New York."
"And then you are only an unallied unattached person. Amber is married to a very prominent—I may say, famous man."
"And I may marry a Presidential candidate? Who can tell? Or perhaps even an editor on one of the great dailies or a popular preacher or a famous tenor or a prince or even a Mayor of New York!"
"Did you see no one in Europe you would like to marry?"
"No one."

Minard's Liniment Co., Limited. Gentlemen—Last winter I received great benefit from the use of MINARD'S LINIMENT in a severe attack of LaGrippe, and I have frequently proved it to be very effective in cases of inflammation.

Eczema's Tortures

All treatments failed for three long years—Cure complete with DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.
Mrs. Link, 12 Walker St., Halifax, N. S., writes: "After three years of miserable torture and sleepless nights with terrible eczema, and after trying over a dozen remedies without obtaining anything but slight temporary relief, I have been perfectly and entirely cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment. After three or four applications of this grand ointment I obtained relief, and a few boxes were sufficient to make a thorough cure. It is six months since I was freed of this wretched skin disease, and as there has been no return of the trouble I consider the cure a permanent one."
Such cures are not brought about by imitations and substitutes for Dr. Chase's Ointment. It is therefore necessary for you to be certain that the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M. D., the famous Receipt Book author, are on the box you buy. 50 cts. a box, at all dealers or Edmans, Bates & Co., Toronto. Write for a free copy of Dr. Chase's Recipes.

"You are heart-free, Bessie?"
"I love no one half so well as I love you, father."
"Then, Bessie, I will tell you something I desire very much. If you feel that you can give me a chance, I shall be very much pleased with you. But I would not coerce you in the matter of marriage. You must satisfy your own heart in an affair so bound up with joy and sorrow as marriage is. I want you to go to Texas this winter."
"But why to Texas? Are you going also?"
"I wish you to visit your uncle, Colonel Sam Madison, and your cousins, Bulb and James and Alphonse."
"I never heard of such people, and think of all my lovely dresses!"
"You can take all the lovely dresses with you. You will need them. Your uncle lives in good style, and you will visit both in Austin and San Antonio."
"Father, speak to me more plainly. I see you have some object in view. Are you going to send me on approval for cousins James and Alphonse to look at?"
"It is just the other way. You know that I am a Texan by birth."
"I never even dreamed of such a thing; if I had I should have laughed at the dream when I awoke."
"I was born in Texas. My father was born there, and my grandfather and father fought with General Houston for the freedom of the state. In reward for their services they received a noble grant of land; thousands and thousands of acres, rolling back from the Colorado in incomparable pastures and woods and farm-land. My grandfather built a fine mansion on one of the highest points—a mansion whose central hall is wide enough to turn a carriage in. It has many lofty rooms and is surrounded by piazzas raised on fluted pillars to the topmost story. The whole house is covered with flowering vines, and it is really an ideal home. I have been thirty years away from it, Bessie, but I can yet see its large rooms and feel the gulf-breeze blowing through them."
"Why have you never gone back to this home?"
"Thirty years ago, when the War broke out, I was in the North at college, and my opinions and desires were in direct opposition to my father's. We wrote hard words to each other. I was forbidden to ever return home, and I was young and foolish enough to accept the decree of banishment without appeal. Then I married, and became so interested—so bound up—in my present business, that I never could find time to put my frequent resolves to go and see my parents into a practical shape. Mother died and then father died, and I found that I had been altogether omitted from his will. I was too proud and too busy to protest. I permitted my younger brother Sam to take possession and keep possession. It is eighteen years since I have heard nothing from the old home until this summer."

The EVENING TELEGRAM.

The advertiser who puts his Adverts. in the EVENING TELEGRAM never complains of results. It is read and believed by the people who buy goods. That is one reason why the TELEGRAM'S advertising columns Carry More Advertising Than Any Other Newspaper in Newfoundland.

That fact "speaks for itself," and it is not our intention just now to emphasize it further. What we want to do is to bring home to the business men (if there are any who have not availed of our columns in the past) the advantage to be gained through a liberal use of the TELEGRAM, in bringing before the people what they want the public—the great buying public—most to know:

The Kind of Goods They Have To Sell, the Quality of the Goods, Prices, &c.

If that is what the shopkeeper wants the public to learn, the TELEGRAM is the right medium through which it can be conveyed, because—

1st. It has the largest circulation, and

2nd. Consequently it is the most widely-read newspaper in Newfoundland;

3rd. Naturally, then, it must be THE BEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM in Newfoundland;

4th. Therefore, the advertiser has everything to gain, and nothing to lose, by availing of the services of the EVENING TELEGRAM during 1911.
