Side Talks
by Ruth Cameron

WHY WE CAN'T TALK OF PRICES ANY MORE.

Do you know something that I think people are going to miss as prices begin to go down—if they ever do?

The freedom with which it has been permissible to mention what one has paid for things in the days of high prices.

There was a time you know, way back before the war, when one did not mention what one had paid for one's new shoes, or what the cost of the new veranda was going to be, or the time one had to pay when one went away for one's summer vacation.

It just wasn't done. If one had paid a lot and wanted that fact known one had to manage to get that fact before the public in some indirect way. Then came the war, and prices became a perfectly legitimate subject of conversation. If one wanted to advertise the fact that one had been able to afford a $20 pair of shoes, or a $1,000 veranda or a vacation at a $10 a day hotel, all one had to do was to begin with a groan about profiteering and high prices, and then as a specific instance just mention how much one had gotten stuck for the shoes, the veranda, or the vacation.

We Could Tell What Our Furs and Our Bathrooms Cost.

Then someone else would tell how he had suffered when he had his new bathroom installed. And someone else would tell how the cost of furs had risen 400 per cent. and cite what he had to pay for his wife's fur coat and everyone pretended to grumble and everyone really had quite a gorgeous time tooting about his expenditures in a way which only the crudest could have done in the old days.

The Authorman says that he thinks half this groaning by business men about losses in commodities, of which the value has been deflated in these last months, cotton and sugar and wool, etc., is just the same sort of thing.

He Thinks They Are Proud of Their Losses.

He thinks they take great pride in saying, "I lost $10,000 last month," meaning that the stock of paper, or wool, or cotton on hand depreciated that much in value.

Doubtless pride is not the only emotion they feel but I shouldn't be surprised if there were some element of mournful pride in their statement. If we ever do get back to normal, if the dollar ever gets so stable again that we are not constantly watching its gyrations, it will be rather interesting to turn our thoughts to other things for a while. Don't you think so?

Encouraging (?)
Local Shipping.

The shipping notes of the city papers record the arrival from the Azores in ballast of a Danish schooner, presumably seeking freight. Are there not local vessels equal to the freight demands? In the face of the campaign now being carried on to encourage home industries, it seems that the policy of foreign freighting is out of line. There are home schooners and men to go in them, then why should foreign-owned vessels be engaged to convey fish to market? We think there should be some law to give the preference in freighting to our own vessels, a law similar to that of the United States. When will we get alive to our own interests? The Newfoundland Manufacturers' Association are carrying on a campaign to boost Home Industries, but some similar association is needed to protect local capital and home labor. —Mr. Grace Standard.

Fads and Fashions.

Beige, sand and gray are favorites of the season.

Large black satin hats are feather-trimmed.

Valenciennes lace is used on a dark background.

Tangerine-color organdie is very popular for dresses.

Very smart is the straight-across Florentine neck-line.

A frock of cricket flannel is bound with black crepe ribbon.

A white voile is dotted and smartly bounded with crepe.

Dresses and blouses have sleeves of contrasting material.

H. Boucher Now
Feels Just Like
Brand New Man

Montreal Citizen Says Tanlac Has Entirely Overcome All His Troubles.

"Tanlac has made me feel like a brand-new man," declared Harry Boucher, 1401 Papineau St., Montreal, a well-known post office employee. "For the first time in two years," said Mr. Boucher, "I can eat a hearty meal without suffering afterwards. Before I took Tanlac, my stomach was so disordered that I had all kinds of trouble after eating. I had no appetite, my liver was sluggish and I felt had all the time. I was nervous, and what little sleep I got didn't seem to rest me. My back hurt me a great deal, and I had spells of dizziness. When I had to sit down to keep from falling, I could find no medicine to help me, and I felt weak and run-down and completely discouraged. "But it was with Tanlac, for the very first bottle helped me, and as I kept on taking it I kept on improving. My appetite is so good now I can hardly wait for meals to come, and I eat all I want of just whatever is on the table without any bad after effects. All my troubles are gone, too, and I feel strong and vigorous and full of energy. Tanlac is the only medicine I ever saw that does all they say it will do."

THE OLD MAN.

I met him often by the sea, a white and wintry gent; his age was eighty-two or three, and he was frail and bent. And still he talked of coming days, plans he had in view, as though he meant to go his ways a century or two.

He'd build a house and plant a tree and take a motor trip, and visit lands across the sea when he could board a ship. He was a blithe and sprightly man, his spirit high and bold; he would not be an also ran, though he was passing old. One balmy night he went to bed all full of pleasant schemes, and in the morning he was dead—he'd checked out in his dreams. And I admire that fine old jay, his system wise appears—to act as though you planned to stay on earth a hundred years. Too many think as they wax old that they have shot their bolts, that plans and schemes they shouldn't hold, since they're no longer coils. And so they sit before the fire and drool of bygone years, and by slow inches they expire, with dotard sighs and tears. When I'm that old I won't admit I'm in the has-been class, but from my trusty lyre I'll hit a noise like sounding brass.

Notable Presentations to Garrick.

On May 3, 1920, the freedom of Stratford-on-Avon was presented to Mr. Garrick by the Mayor, Aldermen and Burgesses, enclosed in the far-famed casket, constructed out of the veritable mulberry tree planted by William Shakespeare himself. This casket was beautifully carved with the following devices: In the front Fame is represented as holding the bust of Shakespeare, while the Three Graces crown it with laurel; the sides have emblematic figures representing Tragedy and Comedy. On the back Garrick was delineated as King Lear, while the corners were ornamented with device representative of Shakespeare's works. The feet of the casket were formed of silver griffins with garnet eyes. The chasing and carving was done by Davis, a well-known Birmingham artist at a charge of £25. At Mrs. Garrick's sale it was acquired by the late Mr. Matthews, the eminent comedian, and in 1855, when that gentleman's library and collection of curios came under the hammer, it was keenly sought after, being eventually knocked down to a Mrs. George Daniels, of Islington, London, at the comparatively low figure of £47. Early in September, 1919, the Mayor and Corporation of Stratford-on-Avon presented Garrick with a finely carved cup, about eleven inches high, made from the same far-famed mulberry tree, and it was this cup that Garrick held in his hand at the Jubilee Celebration when he sang the beautiful song composed by himself for that occasion, which begins:—

"Behold this fair goblet, 'twas carved from the tree Which O my sweet Shakespeare, was planted by thee; As a relic, I kiss it and bow at the shrine— What comes from thy hand must be ever divine! All shall yielding to the mulberry tree, Bend to thee, Blest mulberry!"

Under a decree of Chancery, after the death of Mrs. Garrick, the cup was sold at Christie's Auction Rooms, and secured by a Mr. Johnson, who afterwards offered it for sale at the price of 500 guineas.

Some Weird Weddings.

Bridal Parties Have Been United Under Water and in Shop Windows.

Winsted, Connecticut, was recently the scene of a wedding which had at least the charm of novelty. The nuptials were heralded by a debate on matrimony between three married and three single debaters. Five hundred people paid two whillings each for the privilege of attending the wedding, and as the bridal couple entered the spectators sang, "Oh, I'm glad I'm ready, with the wedding garments on!" George Hamer, the famous pilot of the White Horse rapids, had a wedding as romantic as his life, for the ceremony was performed in a boat as it was racing down the swiftest part of the rapids. When the minister said, "I pronounce you man and wife," so loud was the roar of the waters that he had to shout in order to make himself heard.

A remarkable wedding was that of Mr. George Fairman and Miss Alberta Mitchell, who were made one in a tank at the New York Hippodrome, in 1914. The Rev. W. D. Hughes, we are told, performed the ceremony in the presence of as many members of the Hippodrome Company as could find room inside the diving-bell used in the ordinary theatrical performance.

Clad in Bathing Costumes.

All wore bathing-suits, the bride's dress being of blue, with red-and-white trimmings, whilst a rubber cap did duty for the customary wreath of orange-blossoms. The ceremony concluded, parson and witnesses dived under the bell, and swam to the surface, while the bridal pair ascended in the bell as dry as when they made the descent.

A bridal party on one occasion arrived at the church of St. Nicholas, Strood, to find the sacred building ablaze and a small army of firemen dousing the flames with water. Nothing daunted, the happy couple decided that, fire or no fire, they would not leave the church unwed. To the accompaniment of hissing water-jets, myriads of flying sparks and clouds of smoke, the nuptial ceremony was performed.

Some time ago a Siberian millionaire left his son a large fortune on the singular condition that, if ever he took to himself a wife, he should go through the ceremony in sackcloth and ashes. So far from this condition acting as a matrimonial deterrent, a few months later the son appeared at the altar, duly clad in sackcloth, his head liberally sprinkled with ashes. Considerable amusement was caused recently in New York by a wedding on roller-skates. Mr. Barrett, a wealthy young engineer, first met Miss Pierce at Paradise Park rink, and was so charmed by her graceful skating that he forthwith asked her to glide through life with him. The lady was so little averse to the proposal that she made but one stipulation—they must be married on skates and at the rink, a suggestion which the engineer promptly approved, and a clerical adept on the rollers was duly found.

Married in a Shop Window.

More than one lady has inaugurated her married life on the stage. One of the most daring of these Thespian brides was Miss Violette Mascoite, who was transferred into Mrs. Wilfred Shakespeare on the stage of the Grand Opera House, Newark, New Jersey, a few years ago. The bridegroom was Mr. Wilfred Shakespeare, the manager.

The ceremony took place during the last act of the performance of "Sinbad; or, The Lass that Lover a Sailor." The entertainment was temporarily discontinued, and Mr. Chas. A. Puske, the comedian of the company, came forward and announced that the ceremony was about to take place.

The bride, in her costume of Sinbad, stepped from the wings, draped in a cloak. She was followed and surrounded by the chorus. Then the bridegroom appeared in a dress suit, with a justice of the peace. The chorus served as bridesmaids, and the male members of the company acted as "best men."

There can surely be few more trying ordeals for a "blushing bride" than to stand with the husband of her choice in a shop window, the focus of thousands of curious and amused eyes. But even this ordeal was cheerfully faced by a Cleveland young lady, who, for a suitable consideration, was under the direction of the skipper, the cuttlefish was hoisted to the winch and a spike was driven through its head. It reposes on ice and will go to the museum for mounting when the Caron returns to Liverpool.

New York, April 27.—"Hell's broke loose up forward," roared Taggart, the ship's carpenter, as he displayed a bleeding arm and reached for an axe with a long handle.

He had just come down from the fore-cabin head of the Cunard liner Caronia, and his mates in the ship shop saw him that he was angry.

"What's the row now, John?" asked Billy Tulloch, the second carpenter. "Cuttlefish, biggest in the Atlantic, just been washed up over the starboard bow," answered Taggart. "Tried to get him barked and he got me in the arm with his cuttle bone amidst-

Women of Middle Age

THE critical stage of a woman's life usually comes between the years of 45 and 55, and is often beset with annoying symptoms such as nervousness irritability, melancholia, heat flashes which produce headache and dizziness, and a sense of suffocation. Guard your health carefully, for if this period be passed over safely, many years of perfect health may be enjoyed.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is especially adapted to help women through this crisis. It exercises a restorative influence, tones and strengthens the system, and assists nature in the long weeks and months covering this period. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and contains no harmful drugs or narcotics. Its value is proven by many such letters as these:

Regina, Sask.—"I was going through Change of Life and suffered for two years with headache, nervousness, sleepless nights and general weakness. Some days I felt tired and unfit to do my work. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and found good results, and I also find it a very helpful Spring tonic and useful for constipation from which I suffer much. I have recommended Vegetable Compound to several friends, and am willing you should publish this."—Mrs. MARTHA W. LINDSAY, 310 Robinson St., Regina, Sask.

Lacelles, P.Q.—"During the Change of Life I felt so weak and run down I could hardly do my work. The perspiration would pour over my face so that I couldn't see what I was doing. We live on a farm, so there is lots to do, but many who felt as I did would have been in bed. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it did me a world of good. I tried other remedies but I put Vegetable Compound ahead of them all, and I tell every one I know how much good it has done me."—Mrs. DUNCAN BROWN, Lacelles, Prov. Quebec.

Letters like the above do influence women to try
