A WISH.

A kite and a string
Is the sort of a thing
That I'd like to be if I could.
I'd sail everywhere
In the bonnie blue air,
And hunt up the man-in-the-moon,
I would.

Of course in the sky
I might sail very high!
But I wouldn't care if I should!
For always I'd know
That wherever I'd go,
My mother'd hold on to the string,
She would!

—Dixie Wilson, in Child Life.

"Silver Threads Among the Gold"

The prophecy of "Silver Threads Among the Gold" was never fulfilled for the woman who inspired it. That woman, Mrs. Herbert Danks, was buried in New York recently. For her, at least, the long trail of unhappiness that so strangely followed the writing of the great love song is over. All that now remains of the family are a son and daughter who have been at odds with each other over the royalties from their father's ballad.

Mrs. Danks were eighty-two. She died recently in reduced circumstances in a Brooklyn rooming house. She was buried in New Union Field, after a simple service at the Lefferts Place Chapel.

In 1874 when she and Hart Pease Danks, a young musician and singer, were living happily together in New York, he wrote to her one of the tenderest love songs of the ages. Everybody knows it:

"Darling, I am growing old,
Silver threads among the gold
Shine upon my brow to-day—
Life is fading fast away.
But, my darling, you will be
Always young and fair to me.
Yes, my darling, you will be
Always young and fair to me."

Who has not sung or tried to sing or heard sung that immortal refrain? The words were written by Eben E. Rexford. Danks composed the melody. Perhaps the course of his life would have been different if he had never composed it.

The song sold, prosperity came, and with it domestic happiness. Danks and his wife parted.

In 1903 an old man was found dead in his rooming house, in Philadelphia. His landlady found him, kneeling at the side of his bed, where death had overtaken him. He had a copy of "Silver Threads Among the Gold" in his hand, and on it was pencilled:

"It's hard to grow old alone."

That was how Danks died, and his widow died in circumstances nearly parallel.

Surviving him were Mrs. Danks, two daughters, Miss Gertrude Danks and Mrs. Albert Builder, and a son, Albert. Mrs. Builder is since dead.

The royalties from "Silver Threads" piled in. It was estimated that the song brought $25,000 in royalties previous to 1912. In due course of time the heirs differed over the estate. Each became estranged from the other. The surviving daughter, who had been a singer, objected to an accounting her brother, as administrator, made in 1921. She demanded her share, alleging she was in want. There was also litigation between the family and the estate of H. A. Gordon, publisher of the song.

Meanwhile, for years, while the song which had been written for love of her, was being sung by lovers throughout the world, the widow of Danks grew to feel the pinch of want and the loneliness of old age.

The prophecy of her lover of the old days was never fulfilled.

Sauce for the Gander

Toronto Mail and Empire: What this newspaper advocates and what all the adherents of protection in Canada advocate is the adjusting of our tariff to the hard conditions made for Canada's trade by the Fordney-McCumber tariff. As that tariff establishes a practical blockade of the United States market against the staple products of Canada's agriculture, we must conserve more of the benefits of our own market for our farmers and our own manufacturers. Instead of lowering our tariff, as the King Government has done for facilitating the entry of manufactured goods from the United States and other countries, we should bring our tariff to the level of the United States tariff. Canadian industries cannot sustain the deadly team-work against them of the tariff holders in Washington and the tariff reducers in Ottawa.

India in England

In the Indian Palace at the British Empire Exhibition there is a perfect reproduction of the famous Ajanta wall paintings. Ajanta is a ravine in Hyderabad where, over two hundred years before Christ, the Buddhists made temples in the caves, safe from the attack of wild animals and marauding tribes of men who did not hold the Buddhist faith, and painted on the walls of these caves some of the most marvellous pictures ever done in the history of the world.

Visitors to the Indian Palace at Wembley can see exactly what these caves are like, and study the frescoes without having to undergo the hardships necessary to the traveller who journeys to the caves themselves. It is upon the traditions left in these caves by early Buddhists that the famous school of modern Indian art founded by Sir Rabindranath Tagore in Calcutta, has based its work, and much of which will be seen in the Bombay Court, and in the Indian room at the Palace of Arts. It is the first time in history that Europeans have been enabled to see what Indian art is really like. Mukel Day, himself a student of Sir Rabindranath Tagore, and one who has taken the pilgrimage in person to the actual caves, has carried out the mural decoration.

India has made up its mind that here at least the Visitor to Wembley will see the real thing. He will find himself looking upon designs that the western eye has never seen before.

At the Shrine of St. David

How many Welshmen, who celebrate the feast of their patron saint every year, have made the pilgrimage to his shrine at the lonely cathedral in the Vale of the Roses, in the wilds of Pembrokeshire?

Time was when two pilgrimages to St. David's were equivalent to a visit to Rome; and among the pilgrims were William the Conqueror, Henry II., and Edward I. with his Queen. Nearly fourteen centuries have passed since St. David, the warrior prelate, the founder of ten monasteries, besides those of Bath and Glastonbury died at the reputed age of 147 years among his missionary monks on the site of the present cathedral. A man of great stature, a born leader of men, whether monks or soldiers, to David is largely due the firmness of the roots of the ancient British Church in the soil of Wales to-day.

Thanks to the perseverance of Dean Williams and a number of enthusiastic Welsh Churchmen, there is now in an iron-bound-oaken chest in a recess of the beautiful chapel of the Holy Trinity, behind St. David's high altar, the bones of St. David and his assistant, St. Justinian.

Discovered recently, buried beneath the sanctuary, the bones have been inspected by prominent Harley-street London, men and professors learned in the human frame. The bones are those of a large man and of a man of much smaller build. St. David, we know, was about 6ft. 4in. high, and St. Justinian a short man. Moreover, the portions of the skulls show those extraordinary convolutions of the brain which mark great intellect.

Opposite the oaken chest is the altar, with its British crosses, at which St. David officiated, and near by the portable altar which he received when consecrated bishop in Jerusalem.

What Does Your Garden Grow?

If you grow Potatoes, Turnips, Cabbage and other Vegetables, NOW IS THE TIME TO BUY FERTILIZERS.

Plant your Potatoes, Turnips, Cabbage, etc., in this way and get a bumper crop.

1st. Buy a sack of Fertilizer now. Price is four dollars.

2nd. Dig up the bed well.

3rd. Rake out all the large stones; the finer you rake the soil the better will be your crops.

4th. Make the bed ready for the seed.

5th. Mix Fertilizer well into the soil where the seed is to go, do this mixing carefully, rake it back and forth until all the soil is well fertilized. Do this when soil is dry.

6th. Sow your seed and cover it with the fertilized soil, keep it as free from stones as possible.

7th. Sprinkle fertilizer on top of the bed and rake it, gently, so as not to disturb the seed.

8th. Keep your garden free from weeds.

9th. Keep the surface of the bed loose, don't let it cake, draw the rake through it after rain.

A Thousand Pounds of Fertilizer is Usually Enough for an Acre of Land.

We sell Fertilizers for all sorts of garden crops.

The Fertilizers which we sell are approved of by the Canadian Agricultural Authorities. You can rely on their good qualities.

Household Notes.

Celery stalks simmered with yellow cheese make an attractive appetizer. Serve mushroom sauce and a tart a tiny bit of onion.

Boil fresh peas in just sufficient water to keep them from burning. Try boiling beet or turnip greens with salt pork or ham. Try cooking spinach in stock with a tiny bit of onion.

used in timbales or souffles. A little chopped celery, onion and pimento improve a jellied veal loaf. Vegetables are most nutritious when baked or steamed. String beans cook more thoroughly if made a delicious sauce.

A few sprigs of mint give a flavor to fruit punch. Serve sliced tomatoes and sandwiches with cream cheese. Chopped pimento and green per make a delicious sandwich.
