FOOD OR NAMES.

"What a funny idea people have about what constitutes good food!"

That is, other people—other than me and thee. And possibly I should think some of your ideas funny (to say nothing of what you would think of mine!)

Ask three or four people what they thought of the food at a given hotel or restaurant or boarding house, and you would get three or four varying degrees of enthusiasm or unenthusiasm.

Some People Love A Long Menu.

There are many people who think a long menu means good food.

I was speaking recently of a small hotel at which I thought the food was excellent. I said I thought one got much better food there than at a neighboring hotel at which one paid more money.

"Oh, I don't see how you can say that," said the one with whom I was discussing hotels. "Why the menu is twice as long as at the Savary as at the Trinité."

I have often wondered why more inns don't make a point of having a few things and having them very good instead of presenting menus half a yard long? I know now.

A Few Fancy Things.

Another thing that makes many people feel that they are getting their money's worth is the presence of unusual things on the bill of fare. On a recent trip I heard some fellow tourists enthusing over the fare though it seemed to me almost unpalatable. The soup was thin and cold, the meat was tough, the vegetables were watery, the scraggly cakes that appeared on the bill of fare at noon as "French pastry" and at night as "petit fours" were half stale, the butter was none too good. "I'm writing mother the wonderful things we have to eat," said one of my fellow voyagers to the other, "caviare and pate de foie gras and anchovy and squab," and the other agreed that it really was wonderful fare.

Please, oh please, don't think from this that I am one of those travellers who like to show their superiority by always saying how wretched the food is and how they couldn't find a thing on the bill of fare fit to eat. Heaven forbid.

My Idea Of A Perfect Dinner.

There is a little inn on Cape Cod which has what I call perfect food and service. The dinner is a simple four course meal, exactly what you would have in your own home if you had a perfect cook—delicious soup, a roast or steak, or chops, a salad, and a simple but choice dessert (not necessarily ice cream).

It is not an inexpensive little inn.

Alas no. But I have never felt that I did not get my money's worth there for I for one had rather pay for food than for names on the bill of fare.
