Guelph Evening Mercury

.....MACDONNELL STREET

FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 20, 1868.

VOLUME TWO.

With this number the Evening Mercury enters on its second volume. It is issued during a time of great excitement, which culminated in the September elections. It may be said that political exigency gave it birth, and without laying ourselves out to be taunted with the possession ofordinate vanity, we may claim to have played no inconsiderable part in scenes which immediately succeeded its appearance. As an accurate and faithful register of the events which were then occurring, its advent will be hailed with pleasure, as was demonstrated by the very large circulation it attained. But even after the elections were over—after the excitement and turmoil, inseparable from political contests were past, the Evening Mercury, which naturally be expected, did not decrease, but has steadily increased, thus affording us the satisfaction of knowing that our efforts to produce a first class daily paper, in that prominence is given to news that its importance demands, and in which our opinions on subjects of interest to the country are plainly and unequivocally expressed, are understood and appreciated. We have bestowed upon it the utmost care, we have endeavored to collect with the utmost despatch every item of news that we would prove interesting to our readers, and we have avoided in a single paragraph which had no merit but being sensational, which would prove injurious to the paper of any one. Having an inclination to endorse the belief of Dr. Johnson that the man who is good at making promises is not good for much else, we will refrain from making turgid statements of what we purpose to perform in future. Our readers have our record for a twelvemonth. We thank them for their favors, and will simply add, that we will do better during the year we have entered on, and that no expense or effort will be wanting in order to make its columns still more interesting to our numerous readers, and more valuable to the public. Our daily circulation is now three times that of our contemporary in town, and while it is read in almost every family here, it is largely patronized by the merchants and business men in the different villages in this and the neighboring counties. Its circulation, in conjunction with the Weekly Mercury, now far beyond even our most sanguine expectations, and both editions afford a medium for advertising unequalled by any paper in Ontario, west of Toronto.

The Last British Victory.
The following from the N. Y. Tribune is well worth quoting:—"I had read," wrote the Emperor Theodore to Sir Robert Napier, on the eve of the final battle in which the Russian throne was to be overturned, "if God had so decreed, to conquer the whole world; and it is my desire to die if my purpose is not fulfilled." To his barbed mind there was no glory but the glory of battle; and when a king lost power of "dangling strong men in chains like infants," it was time for him to lay aside his crown. We wonder whether Theodoros ever comprehended the real motive of the British expedition. Certainly he could not have appreciated the chivalric impulse which sent a powerful army over thousands of miles of ocean, desert, unknown mountains, for no other reason than to rescue from captivity three persons of whom the world would never have heard except for their misfortunes. How the savage monarch would have been could he have foreseen that the chains of those captives were loosened, though the king died, though his armies lay scattered and the whole country at the mercy of the conquerors, the victors would turn around and go peacefully home again! Here was the illustration of the true principle of warfare which would have been with wonder and admiration, difficult, and dangerous, undertaken merely for the sake of a sentiment, a policy of extortion, a spectacle which which she reaped more glory than from this march into the mountains of Africa. She has achieved hundreds of more brilliant exploits; she has met hundreds of more dangerous foes; and the battles of Marlborough, Nelson, Wellington, Havelock, and Clyde will fill many a glowing page of military history for long years to come; but the moderation and honest singleness of purpose which have governed her conduct in this last battle for the rights of her oppressed subjects will redound more to her credit than dearly bought victories on more bloody fields. It would have been far better if the army had gone home without any plunder, but it is not always easy to control soldiers in the hour of triumph; and the thefts of a few thousand pounds worth of jewels and relics seems comparatively little after all when we remember that Sir Robert might have stolen a kingdom.

FRANCE AND GERMANY.—The Moniteur once more declares that France will not intervene in German questions, and that no step will be neglected on the part of the Government which has a tendency to quiet the public mind. Declarations of this kind generally fail to have any influence. The further declaration of the Moniteur that France will extend her sympathy and encouragement to the internal reforms lately inaugurated in Austria and Turkey, is chiefly directed against the Pan-Slavonian movement in those countries. The praise bestowed upon the Austrian reforms will, moreover, give great offence in Rome.

Garibaldi is suffering so severely from a rheumatic attack that he is compelled to go on crutches.
