Girls Men Like

BY CYNTHIA GREY.

"What qualities do men most admire in girls?" Many, many times this question comes to me. My answer would be that, it depends on the individuals. But it is a question which should be answered from the masculine point of view, so I've asked opinions from many men, and here they are assembled—be sure to read them, girls!

"The girl who is sweet, yet has dignity enough not to be mushy."

"The girl who has plenty of spunk."

"The girl who can keep one guessing."

"The girl who is pretty, witty, and also domestic in her tastes."

"The girl who never flirts."

"The girl who never says sharp, unkind things in an effort to be thought 'smart' or 'sarcastic.'"

"The girl who makes generous allowances for the mistakes of others."

"The girl who smiles with us, but who is also ready to sympathize with our sorrows."

"The girl who always acknowledges her fault and is willing to make reparation."

"The girl who keeps her head under all circumstances and knows the proper thing to do in emergencies."

"The girl who is clean and wholesome rather than pretty, whose disposition is sweet, and yet who has spunk enough to take her own part."

"The girl who when she gives her word keeps to it, and expects the same of others."

"The girl who has common sense enough not to expect married life to be a bed of roses, and yet whose ideals are high."

"The girl who is broad enough to like everybody because she finds something to admire in each person she meets."

"The girl who makes her own business and knows when not to talk."

"The girl who is never dismal, tearful or soft."

"The girl who can go camping without getting fussed up about it."

"The girl who makes her world a pleasant place to live in because she's so pleasant herself."

"The girl who appreciates the fact that she cannot always have first choice of things, and never kicks about it."

Dear Miss Grey: Please give me a recipe for candied citron.

A READER.

A.—After cutting the citron into strips, weigh and allow one pound of sugar to each pound of citron. Make a syrup with one cup water to each pound sugar. Cook citron in this until tender, then remove and place on large platters. Boil syrup until very thick with a little ginger to flavor, put the strips back with a little lemon juice, stir until coated with sugar, then remove and lay on platter to dry.

Dear Miss Grey: I am 25, 5 feet 7 inches tall, weigh 152, and have a ravenous appetite. What can I do to reduce it?

SUBSCRIBER.

A.—Just make up your mind not to eat so much and stick to your resolution. Eat fruits, raw and cooked vegetables, and let the fatty and starchy foods alone. Take long walks, scrub the kitchen floor and porch and drink plenty of water between meals.

A SON OF THE IMMORTALS

BY LOUIS TRACY.

Author of "The Stowaway," "The Message," "The Wings of the Morning," Etc.

A tremor ran through the girl's limbs; but she faced him bravely. Though her lips quivered, she forced herself to utter words that sounded like a jibe. "I am to play Pallas Athene to your Perseus," she said, and it seemed to him for a moment that she was in a mood to jest at her own expense.

"If you mean that I regard you as my goddess, I am well content," he answered quickly. Ah, but wait! Pallas Athene came to Perseus in a dream and let us make believe that we are dreaming now. She had great gray eyes, clear and piercing, and she knelt at once like a child to his feet and the secrets of her soul. My eyes are not gray, Alec, nor can they pierce as hers; but I can borrow her beautiful words, and tell you that she turns her face from the creatures of clay. They grow fatter at ease like sheep in the pasture, and eat what they did not sow, like oxen in the stall. They grow and spread, like the gourd along the ground; but like the gourd, they give no shade to the traveller, and when they are ripe death gathers them, and they go down unloved into hell, and their name vanishes out of the land. But to the souls of fire she gives more fire, and to those who are manifold she gives a power more than man's. These are her heroes, the sons of the Immortals. They are blessed, but not like the men who live at ease. She drives them forth by strange paths through doubt and need and danger and battle. Some of them are slain in the flower of their youth, no man knows when or where, and some of them win noble names as a fair and green old age. Not even the goddess herself can tell the hap that shall befall them; for each man's lot is known only to Zeus. Have you reflected on these things, Alec? Be sure of yourself! There may be dangers to encounter, and monsters of the deep."

He came very near to her. Her eyes were glistening. For one glowing second they looked into each other's hearts. "And perhaps a maiden chained to a rock to be rescued," he whispered. Then she drew herself up proudly. "Do not forget that I am Pallas Athene," she said. "My shield of brass is an ensel and my mighty spear a maulstick; but I keep to my rule. I am not a goddess. I am long to clasp her in his arms; he flashed upon him with an inspiration from Olympus. He smiled and, unthinkingly, she had bound herself to his fortunes. "I will leave it at that," he said quietly. This sudden air of confidence was bewildering. She had been swept off her feet by emotion, and the very considerations she thought she had conquered were now upon her like heart-strings. He must not go away as her knight errant, eager and ready to slay dragons for her sake. "Do not misunderstand me," she faltered. "I was only quoting a passage from King's Greek fairy tales. That has always had a peculiar fascination for me."

"I'll get that story and read it. But I am interfering with your work, and here comes your friend, the Hummingbird. If he said anything funny to me just now, I should want to strangle him. So good-by, dear Joan. I will turn up again tomorrow and tell you how I fared in each round."

And he was gone, leaving her breathless and shaken; for well she knew that he would keep his word. She had pledged to his eager confidence would apply alike to the day's sport and his future life. With a queer cracked voice that yet was musical sang softly in German at her elbow: "If the song should chance to wander Forth the minstrel too must go."

It was passing strange that crooked little Felix Poluski, ex-nihilist, the wildest firebrand ever driven out of Warsaw, and the only living artist who could put on canvas the gleam of heaven that lights the Virgin's face in the "Immaculate Conception," should justify his nick-

A.—(1) Talk it over with your mother—they'll gladly help you. The girl who follows a good mother's advice is never called a flirt. (2) Very little. (3) Yes. (4) In summer. (5) Yes—and absurd, for it feels no one.

This Year's Hatpin Breaks the Record.

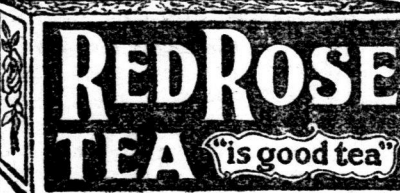

French designers are selling hatpins with large heads, which actually revolve as the wearer walks in the breeze.

Some of them are large enough to contain mirrors, powder puffs, small change or an extra hairbrush.

So huge are others that they have hinged mirrors—lined lids, and the receptacle will hold all the above-mentioned knickknacks at once.

Guards are made to cover the dangerous point of the hatpin. They are ornamental, matching the head of the pin. Both heads and guards are represented as pheasants, owls' heads or other bird heads made in gold, silver and gems, or rhinestones and imitations. In some the pinheads are three inches across.

name of Le Bourdon by humming those two lines. "I hope you are not a prophet, Felix," said Joan, with a catch in her voice. "No, ma belle, no prophet, merely an avenger, a slayer of kings. I see you have just routed one of the deepest eyes of the old hunchback, and for the first time noted that they were gray and very bright and piercing. At the same time the fancy crossed her mind that perhaps Henri Quatre had had blue eyes, like yet tender, like unto Alec's."

"So you too are aware that Monsieur Delgado is a prince?" she said, letting her thought bubble forth at random. "Some folk call him that, and it is the worst thing I know of him so far, it means he is a prince of the devil."

Joan swung round to her picture. "If Alec had the chance of becoming a king, he would be a very good one," she said loyally.

Poluski's wizened cheeks puckered into a grin. He glanced at the easel and thence to the picture on the wall. "Perfectly, my dear, or perhaps because of them, is the least popular part of the Louvre. Artists haunt it; but the artist's mood has a way of expressing itself on the canvas. He laughed, with a certain sense of effort. "I like you best when you sing, Felix. Sometimes, when you speak, you are infelix."

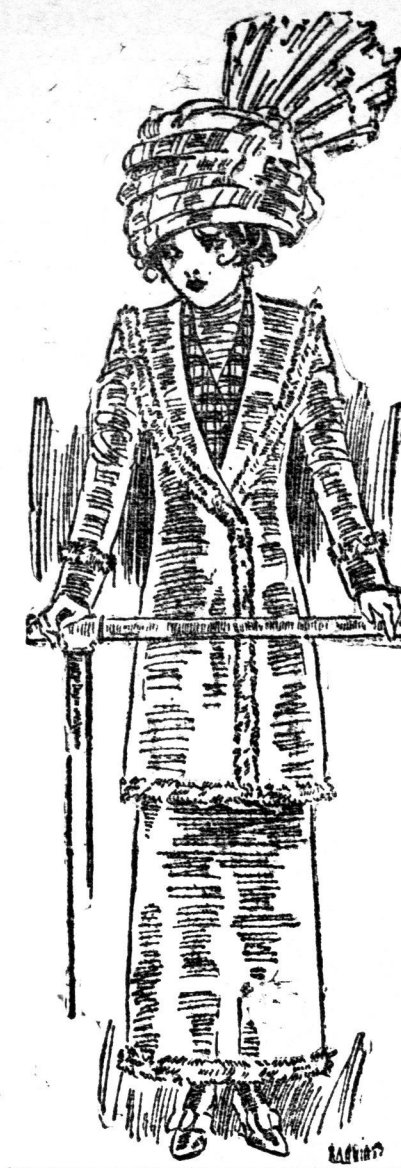

"By all means go home," he grinned. "I cannot both joke and copy a Caravaggio."

He began to paint with feverish industry, did not look at her again, but tossed an adieu ever his humped shoulder when she hurried away. "Then he gazed reproachfully, almost vindictively, at the unfixed eyes of the transfigured Virgin. "Now, you!" he growled. "Vous êtes benie entre toutes les femmes! This is your line. Why don't you hear? Superlative! The girl is worth it."

Silkline for Slips.
Softer than lawn and much less expensive than the Chinese silk often employed for colored slips to be worn under sheer lingerie frocks, is ordinary silkline which may be purchased in the upholstery department. This material costs but a trifle the yard and comes in most charming tints of pink, pale blue and yellow. The slip should be cut all in one and fastened down the back, a deep flounce being added at the knee. This flounce should be finished with a lace frill so that the color of the slip may not show too plainly under the hem of the frock, spoiling thus the soft gleam of the tint through the transparent fabric above.

FASHIONS

A striking feature of handsome new hats is the underbrim facing in a light color which contrasts with the rest of the hat. In these facings much use is made of pink or rose-colored satin, crepe or chiffon, as well as for trimmings on the rest of the hat.

For fur-trimmed costumes, boots with fur collars or fur wetting down the front are to be very fashionable this winter.

The banded skirt, which is a feature of the styles for adults, is as prominent in children's wear and bids fair to continue throughout the fall. The narrow line is, of course, not so strongly emphasized as it is in styles for women, but is very apparent.

A continuance of the popular mushroom shapes is indicated in millinery. These are developed in both silk beaver, velvet and fur. Proper trimmings for these include wreath and bouquets of flowers, made of foliage or satin ribbons, in pastel colorings.

Coats for very young children are being made of white and pastel-colored chiffon broadcloths. High-style novelties in juniors' lines include good-looking garments made of black velvet, velvet and corduroy.

Dressy frocks of challis are coming into prominence. Very pretty frocks are made of this material, trimmed with velvet ribbons, small gilt or nickel buttons, or with shirtings and cordings of the material.

Large fancy buttons, together with velvet-bound button holes, are a feature of the trimmings used for coats this year. A few of the wool coats show plaid linings or a contracting color weave. Soft white or colored

You are only eye-wise when you buy a metal bed. You see but the externals; and you cannot know if the real quality is there. We make it needless that you should see more than this "Ideal" trademark on the footrail. That makes it sure you are buying wisely. For this is the trademark forty inspections made certain the bed might fitly bear.

Forty inspections—to make certain an Ideal-trademarked bed will not rattle; will not wobble; will not fail to stand hard, long service. "Ideal" Metal Beds are made—not merely marketed. Study that idea.

Yes, they may cost a little more—a very little more. But you would not weigh that little against the satisfying knowledge that your "Ideal" Metal Bed is the best bed value you could have bought.

That is true whether you pay three dollars or much more than that. For you buy the same quality in every "Ideal" Metal Bed, whatever its price. Read "The Philosophy of Sleep"—an interesting little book we'd like to send you—free. Ask for Booklet No. 122
