The young man was wheeling north on the street railway tracks. The motorman signalled him to get out of the way, and when he attempted to turn his wheel it caught in a groove in the track and he was thrown directly in front of the car. Howlett dropped the fender and reversed his car. The cyclist was picked up by the fender and carried at least twenty feet before the car could be stopped.

The spectators expected to see the man badly injured, but he picked himself up, brushed off his clothes, and went away on his wheel. The street railway employees endeavored to secure him name, but he refused to give it.
