The Bill to reform legal procedure in Ontario authorizing agreements between solicitors and clients, directly touches every man. After this bill becomes law a solicitor may say to his client: "I will take up your claim for so much (a lump sum)." The client may or may not have independent advice when he makes the agreement. It will stand good in law. One difficulty appears at once. Competition exists between lawyers like everyone else. Solicitor A proposes to take B's case for $500. Solicitor C goes one better, and says he will take the case for $400.

This provision we deem one of the best features of the bill. The present system of remunerating solicitors is a direct inducement to prolong litigation, to avoid settlements, to burden a suit with endless detail and endless expense. The community will approve of a change which to some extent gives litigants the benefit of competition. Competition prevails in most business, and no business needs it more than the profession of law. People who have not been there before have little idea of the costs of the litigation. If they were given to understand at the outset that going to law would cost them a certain specified amount they would have a certainty by which they could measure their resources. Whatever may be the result of the bill we trust this feature of it will become law.—The World.

A PROSPEROUS COMPANY.

"A comparison of the business of the North American Life at the close of 1891, with what it was five years previous, shows an increase in payments to policy-holders of 123 per cent. in cash income of 91 per cent. in assets of 143 per cent. and in surplus of 74 per cent.

The assets amount to $1,387,146, the reserve fund to $1,614,039 and there is a net surplus of $338,216 for the extra security of policy-holders." Montreal Witness, Feb. 21st, 1893.
