

remains were laid out, there was found, next his skin, a ring containing a lock of the hair of Mary his Queen, whom he had gone to meet in that region of joys into which death shall never enter, and where separations are unknown.

King William was of middle height, well made, though not robust, dark complexion, features delicate though not unmanly, nose aquiline and prominent, eye keen and quick as that of an eagle, and possessing hands small and beautiful. His activity was wonderful, yet as a rule he never exhibited any evidence of hurry, fatigue, or vexation. His manners were easy and graceful, and his natural dignity was seldom ruffled by any outbreak of temper. In his Cabinet he was as cool and calm as on the battle-field.

Good John Evelyn, of the arrival of the Prince, says, "All the world go to see the Prince at St. James', where there is a great Court. There I saw him and several of my acquaintances who came over with him. He is very stately, serious and reserved." Again, "He has a thoughtful countenance, is wonderfully serious and silent, and seems to treat all persons alike gravely, and to be very intent on affairs—Holland, Ireland, and France calling for his care."

King William's body was emblomed and deposited in the vault under King Henry VII.'s Chapel, Westminster. After an anthem had been sung, Clarencieux proclaimed his late Majesty's style, besought Almighty God to bless and preserve the successor to the Crown
