

CONTENTS.

xiii

	PAGE
And the formation of a continental government	314
Opinions of Washington, Greene, and John Adams. Hesitancy of Maryland	315
Efforts of Samuel Adams, Wythe, Franklin, and Hooper	316
Dunmore begins the war in Virginia. His instructions	317
He offers freedom to indented servants and negro slaves	318
Repulse of the British from the Elizabeth river	319
Dunmore burns the city of Norfolk	320
The Virginia convention demands free trade	321
State of the army round Boston. Black men among them	322
Congress impatient for an attack on Boston	323
Washington's reproof of congress	324
The British army in Boston have no thought of danger	325
Washington prepares to drive them from Boston	326
Dorchester Heights fortified in one night	327
Howe embarks his army. Joseph Brant in England	328
What England was expecting when the Americans moved into Boston	329
Washington's reception in Boston	330
Rhode Island renounces allegiance to the king	331

CHAPTER XXI.

ACTS OF INDEPENDENCE.

February-April 1776.

Character of John Adams	332
America claims a right to contract alliances	335
Pennsylvania still professes allegiance to the king	336
Enlistments for the army. Choice of general officers	336
Congress charge the king himself with their grievances	337
Congress totally forbid the importation of slaves	338
American ports thrown open to the commerce of the world	339
Pennsylvania adheres to the proprietary government	339
Heroism of James Mugford	340
Instructions to the British commissioners for America	341
Pamphlet of Richard Price on "Liberty"	342
The exercise of authority under the crown to be suppressed	343
The congress order the colonies to make governments of their own	344
American legislatures to consist of two branches	345
A republic an Elysium compared with monarchy or aristocracy	346

CHAPTER XXII.

BRITAIN SEEKS FOREIGN AID.

1775-1776.

The king asks a brigade of Holland	347
Opposed by the states of Overijssel and fails	348
Britain desires to recruit in Germany in spite of the law	349
Saxony refuses subsidiary troops	349