HON. WALTER LONG AT THE EMPIRE CLUB

Hon. Walter Hume Long, M.P. for The Strand, London. England, addressed the Empire Club yesterday at luncheon in McConkey's. Mr. Long is not a tall man. He wears a polished bald head, a blond moustache and the weather-reddened English complexion. He does not drop his h's, but he drops his g's, and spoke of thinkin', talkin', workin', strugglyin.' Apart from this flaw he is a fluent and easy speaker, and possesses the faculty of giving the most elaborate expression to nothing in particular, and with an earnestness and intensity of conviction which completely overwhelms his suddence. By this it may be gathered that Mr. Long is one of the shrewdest and cleverest of the speakers in the Britsh Conservative party, and he has been in the running for the leadership itself.

There was a record attendance when iRishop Sweeny introduced him as having come over to Canada to gain in formation of the conditions of the country at first hand, and this he haddene under the guardianship and guidance of Sir Henry Pellatt.

Imperial Problems.

Mr. Long confined himself to imperial problems, and notwithstanding the report of an evening paper, did not even allude to Ireland. Imperialism was one of those topics, he said, that bring to one's lips such a plethora of words it is impossible to be breif in descanting on the past, the present and the future of the British Empire. He compared Lord Beaconsfield and Sir John A. Macdonald in their devotion to the empire, and their devotion to the empire, and their clearer vision of the future of imperial issues. The two great imperial movements of the moment, interdependent on each other, were imperial trade and imperial defence.

Is no Pessimist. He was no pessimist. He realized the difficulties to be met, but he believed in the race to which he belonged. He felt sure they would find a solution Our empire was a collection of free. Our empire was a collection of free. Self-governing communities. The offering they brought was with all their hearts and both their hands. He was sure when the Canadian Government made its appropriate the would made.
